THE OUTER WORLD IS FULL OF BEAUTY

To us in despite of the absence of years
How sweet the remembrances of home still appears?
From allurements abroad which but flatter the eye,
The unsatisfied heart turns, and says with a sigh—
Home, home, sweet, sweet home?
There's no place like home,
There's no place like home.

But the eye grows tired in looking at the manifold and ever varying beauties of nature, and gladly turns to the quiet and not less beautiful Home-life for rest and comfort

"Be it ever so Humble, There's no Place like Home."

AT AUCTION,

SATURDAY the 13th day of April, A. D. 1889

STATE NEWS.

ANDROSCOGGIN.

E. C. Milliken, of Portland, Assistant Adjutant General, Department of Maine, Grand Army of the Republic, will deliver the Memorial Address before Kimball Post at Livermore Falls on Memorial Day.

AROOSTOOK.

The Republican issues a ten page paper this week, together with a supplement.

The trustees of the Ricker Classical Institute at Houlton, at their next meeting will probably authorize the remodeling of the old academy building into a dormitory for the accommodation of some thirty or forty students and a tenement, to be occupied by the family of the principal. The school is very prosperous, about one hundred and ten pupils now being in attendance. This number will be largely increased by the introduction of a normal department for which an appropriation was made by the last legislature. A teacher for this department has not yet been selected.

There is a little woman in Ashland, says the Herald, who is carrying on a large lumbering operation, besides managing a family of children and a refractory husband. She recently made a trip some forty miles into the woods to her lumber camps, settled with her men, examined the landings of logs and timber with a critical eye, inspected an extensive dam made for driving purposes, and made arrangements for driving out the lumber. She can boast of having been further into the Aroostook wilderness than any other white woman.

CUMBERLAND.

The First Baptist church at Portland has given $500 to Hebron as a thank-offering for the aid received not long ago by the State Convention.

A small boy with a mania for stealing velocipedes was arrested in Portland, Wednesday. He has stolen three lately, sold one of them to another boy for five cents and other considerations and then stole it from him. He says he wants to go to the Reform School, where his cousin is, and he may get his wish.

KENNEBEC.

The Trustees of the Insane Hospital organized, Wednesday morning, by the election of Hon. Frederick Roble, of Gorham, as President, and Dr. E. A. Thompson as Secretary. The plans for the new building, designed by Geo. W. Coombs, of Lewiston, were approved. Proposals will be received until April 29.

Work is progressing rapidly at the Edwards' mill, Augusta. The trench for the cistern wall of the southern extension is nearly completed. In blasting the ledge of the river bed, the rock is so filled with seams that but small portions are broken out at each discharge, and the work goes on slowly. Bricklaying on the northern extension will begin next week.

A salutary lesson is taught by the conviction, Wednesday, of the wanton destroyers of trout in Belgrade stream. Even in the most remote districts, the fact that our fish and game laws are not a dead letter, placed upon the statute books merely to satisfy a few wealthy sportsmen, is dawning upon the people, and it is likely that the sentence imposed upon the convicted dynamiters will be a warning, not unheeded.

KNOX.

The proprietors of the limerock quarry at Warren, have found that it yields a valuable quality of soap-stone, as well as an extra quality of lime.

Rev. W. O. Holman has accepted an invitation to supply the pulpit of the Baptist church in South Thomaston. Mr. Holman is well known in Maine, having been pastor at different times of Baptist churches in Rockland, Ellsworth and Biddeford.

The Hurricane Canning Company, of Rockland, has about forty hands now employed canning clams. From May 1, through the month of June, lobsters will be handled and a big force put on. When the lobster season comes to a finish, other fish will be canned as the season advances, and the company hopes to make a big increase over its last season's output.

SAGADAHOC.

Stacy Huntington, son of Benjamin Huntington, of Richmond, lost part of three fingers while trying to make a toy cannon out of an apparently useless exploding cap used for firing dynamite cartridges, Wednesday.

WALDO.

There was a bad robbery at Monroe, Sunday evening, the perpetrators of which have not yet been discovered. Some time during the night, the post office building was broken into, and there were stolen one hundred dollars worth of stamps, envelopes and postal cards, seventy-five dollars in money, fifteen or sixteen watches, and other goods. It was an exceedingly bold robbery, and should warn the country postmasters and store keepers to look out for their property.

Short Cuts.

President Oakes of the Northern Pacific Road, was once a clerk at a salary of $600 per year. He gets twenty times that salary now.

Iowa farmers last year raised corn enough to pay off all farm mortgages in the State and leave a balance of 100,000,000 bushels.

The will of the late Congressman Peter Paul Mahoney, which leaves all his property to his widow, whom he married four months ago, will be contested by his sisters.

The pretty town of Greensburg, Penn., with a population of 8,000, has thirteen handsome churches, representing a value of 400,000. Probably no town of its size in the United States has so many costly churches.

John Wright, who is said to have been the tallest man in the United States, died in Anderson, Ind., on Monday. He was over eight feet in height, and is reputed to have been a fearless fellow in many respects, but he never had the courage to get married.

Booth cast the first and the only vote of his life for Abraham Lincoln in the autumn of 1864. A short time after, on the night of Nov. 25th, 1863, the three Booth brothers appeared in the play of "Julius Cæsar," Edwin as Brutus, Junius as Cassius, and John Wilkes as Marc Antony.

Hans von Bulow, the famous pianist, who is now in this country, is noted for his eccentricity as well as for his musical talent. When he has done anything to [illegible] his friends and enrage his enemies [illegible] makes no apologies, but simply shrugs his shoulders, and says, "It's a way I [illegible]."

During a heavy snow storm at Punxsutawney, Pa., on Saturday morning, an immense flock of bewildered wild ducks, lit in the town, and hundreds were killed. Twenty-five or thirty of the birds were caught alive. They would alight in the deep snow, and, being unable to rise, were captured.

Dr. Norris, medical director of the division of the Pacific, says that "out of the sixty or more officers in the American Army you couldn't get a fat man's club of six members." No man can join a cavalry regiment who weighs over 160 pounds. Officers in the general service are liable to be retired for obesity.

A violent volcanic eruption occurred in the Philippine Islands, last December. Vast volumes of ashes were thrown up from the Mayon volcano, and in a very short space of time the adjacent towns were buried in ashes to the depth of [illegible] feet. Thirty-six villages were destroyed, thirty-nine persons were killed, and 20,000 persons rendered homeless.

Countess Orosy, a lady of the Austrian nobility and one of the finest horsewomen in Europe, has become a circus manager. She lately inherited a fortune of a million gulden and has built an enormous circus building at Vienna. She hopes to take her troupe to the Paris Exposition and exhibit it. Her peculiar fad is encouraged by her friends, who admire her originality and vigor.

Thomas Best, of Newcastle, Pa., who is eighty-two years old, has used tobacco for sixty years. Three weeks ago he lost his mind and sight, but after three days his mind returned, his sight came back so that he dispensed with glasses, the aches and pains of old age vanished, and, strange to say, he has forgotten that he ever used tobacco, and the taste of it makes him deathly sick.

The house in which General Winfield Scott resided in Washington, known as the chain building, is to be torn down to make way for a more modern structure. In the rebuilding of the old mansion the proprietors of the enterprise will retain the large room on the first floor, which served as the reception room for the general, and this will be made out of the principal parlors of the modern structure.

Unwonted activity in tree planting prevails in Los Angeles county, Cal., this season. Never before has there been planted anything near so many trees. The finer varieties of peaches for canning, Bartlett pears, apricots, prunes and fine varieties of apples are the favorite species. The planting of orange trees has also been resumed on a gigantic scale. Walnut trees are also being set out in large numbers.

Angeli of Vienna, Queen Victoria's favorite portrait painter, had received a commission from her Majesty for a half-length portrait of Prince Alexander of Battenberg, which was to have been hung in the Tapestry Rooms at Windsor Castle, but, in consequence of the Prince's recent marriage, the order has been cancelled, and the queen also ordered all the photographs she possessed of the prince to be thrown into the fire.

The Harvard University Boat Club has sent out an appeal to the graduates through the alumni associations in the larger cities for subscriptions to a fund for the purchase of a new and speedy steam launch. The old launch, which has been used for coaching for many years, is nearly worn out, and the boat club, though out of debt, expects no revenue this year that will meet the expenses of the season at New London. For the new launch $3,250 is needed.

The home of Henry G. Marquand, the new president of the Metropolitan Museum of Art, on Madison Avenue, New York, is said to be the handsomest private residence in America, not even excepting the Vanderbilts'. There are rooms in Mr. Marquand's house that cost hundreds of thousands of dollars to decorate and furnish. Of these the Japanese room is the most famous. There are besides this a Moorish room, an Italian room, and a Greek room, the latter designed by L. Alma-Tadema.

Hollingbury Copse, the old home of Halliwell-Phillips, at Brighton, England, was composed of a group of "ready made" houses bought in London all in a condition to be put up. The houses, which were six in number, were connected by long rambling corridors all christened after Shakespearian characters and localities. Across the front of the main house ran the motto, "Come hither, come hither, come hither, here no enemy but Winter and rough weather." Over a side entrance to the study of the famous Shakspearian scholar, ran the line, "Open locks, whoever knocks."

The fear of assassination, it is said, attended ex-King Milan in every act of his life. It is told that he slept in a room with double doors, iron-cased, which he locked himself and bolted from the inside. A powerful mastiff slept at the foot of his bed, and he kept a loaded revolver on the table. There was no chimney-place in the room, lest dynamite should be dropped down it; and no coal was burned in any room which he occupied, because he once saw a murderous Nihilist, engine which looked outwardly like a lump of coal. He was so afraid of poison that he always had the wine he drank uncorked before him. His coffee was always made in his presence with a spirit of wine apparatus, and he would never, when eating alone, touch a made dish, but only plain toast or boiled egg—for there is no putting poison into an egg.

Fool and His Money.

HE PRODUCES $1,700 TO WIN $5,000 AND HIS MONEY IS STOLEN BY SHARPERS.

Daniel Keller, a well-known farmer living near Bear Gap, Pennsylvania, was robbed of $1,700 under very peculiar circumstances, Monday. A week ago a well dressed middle-aged man called on Keller and stated that he was desirous of buying a farm. Mr. Keller showed him about the premises, but the deal hung fire, and the stranger remained at Keller's house as his guest.

Monday a young man, also well dressed, arrived upon the scene, representing himself as a son of John B. Packer, president of the Sunbury Bank. He wanted to purchase a Durham bull. The two strangers and Keller went into the parlor of the latter, and while seated there the newly arrived young man producing a pack of cards proposed to show them a fine trick. The man selected the ace of spades and two spot cards and began tossing them about, face down. The trick was to select the ace. The original stranger tried his hand with varying success, and then "Packer" said he would bet $5,000 that neither of his companions could pick out the right card.

MR. KELLER THINKS HE SEES A CHANCE.

With this stranger No. 1 picked up the winning card, gave Keller the wink, and bent the corner, so as to leave a slight crease.

"I'll go you $5,000 on that," said Keller.

The cards were again thrown, and Mr. Keller picked up one of them, turned it over and exclaimed: "There you are! Now pass over the money." He had won.

"Well, I owe you $5,000," said the young fellow, "and here's your money. However, you can't have it until I have proof that you made the bet in good faith. Show up your dust, so that I can see that you could have paid me had I won in place of yourself."

"Oh, I have got the money all right," replied Keller.

"Show up, then, and I will pass this over."

MONEY PRODUCED AND STOLEN.

Mr. Keller began searching about for money. He gathered in a few hundred from one place, and a few hundred from another, and when he had run his improvised banks into insolvency he had $4,700 in glittering gold, which he brought in and laid upon the table. Quick as a flash the stranger No. 1 whipped out a revover and placing the muzzle at Mr. Keller's head threatened to blow his brains out if he uttered a cry or stirred a hand or foot. The other man gathered up the gold, loaded it into his pockets and fled. Then the old man with the revolver, still covering his victim with its gleaming barrel, backed to the door, passed out, closed it and scampered away in the direction taken by his companion.

Mr. Keller is about seventy years old, and is the owner of several fine farms in the neighborhood of his home. He was in Sunbury Tuesday morning in consultation with the authorities. Nothing had been heard or seen of the rascals since they disappeared from his house.

DANA'S SARSAPARILLA,

Absolutely Cures Disease.

PROOF.

Watch this Ad. and read Testimonials of WONDERFUL CURES Every Day.

march27

Some of the Reasons why DANA'S SARSAPARILLA Has no Equal in the Market.

1st. The selection and peculiar combination of the ingredients, entering into its composition, have been made the study of a physician for years, and nothing which medical skill and science can do, is lacking in this respect.

2d. Nothing but the best materials are used in its composition. Unlike all cheap preparations, DANA'S SARSAPARILLA after once being used, advertises itself.

3d. The dose is small. No preparation upon the market gives the amount of medicinal value for the money, as DANA'S SARSAPARILLA.

4th. Nothing enters into its composition deleterious to the most feeble constitution. The dose can be regulated for the weakest child.

5th. Its composition is so concentrated in form, its good effects are felt almost immediately after using. A trial of one bottle convinces the most skeptical of its great value.

6th. It has stood the test of years. Its sale increases each year, from the merits it sustains. Testimonials come from hundreds who are using DANA'S SARSAPARILLA. Do not be deceived in using an inferior article. If your dealer does not have it, ask him to order it for you.

7th. In summer's heat or winter's cold, in the changing temperature, incident to spring and fall, cleanse the system by the use of DANA'S SARSAPARILLA.

A Mammoth Press.

THE STRUGGLES AND SUCCESS OF ITS SCOTCH INVENTOR.

The foundations for the new perfecting press of the enterprising firm of Vickery & Hill have been laid from the bottom of the cellar up. The present plant, including five large Campbell presses, has been sold to a New York firm but will not be removed for a few months. The new press will arrive about May 15, and be in running order July 1. It weighs twenty-two tons, and will cost $25,000. With the possible exception of one press in Stuttgart, Germany, the press will be the most complete printing machine in the world. Its minimum speed is 6,000 copies of papers every hour, printed and folded ready for mailing, while with less care it can turn out not less than double that number, showing a capacity of 120,000 copies every ten hours. There are many presses capable of greater speed, but the work they do is newspaper work and not fine book and cut work. The papers issued by the firm have to be printed carefully and with due regard to proper distribution of ink, etc., which cannot be done on high rate newspaper presses. The only similar press in this country is the almanac press owned by J. C. Ayer & Co., of Lowell, Mass., which prints and folds about 100,000 almanacs a day, equal to 50,000 of our papers.

The press is a triumph of mechanical skill, and reflects great credit upon the designer and builder, Mr. Walter Scott, whose career is as remarkable as that of James Watt, the inventor of the steam engine, or Elias Howe, the maker of the first sewing machine. Scott learned his trade in Scotland, his native country, but becoming dissatisfied with his chances in life and came to America in 1868, a young man. He did not find gold in the streets, and after drifting around from city to city finally landed in Chicago. He paid his last five dollars to a landlady and then made up his mind to find work. He hired out for two dollars a day, on condition that if needed and satisfactory, he should be retained. He rose rapidly, went into the press-making business for himself and now owns an unencumbered plant at Plainfield, N. J., worth at least $250,000. He is a genuine Scotchman with all the peculiarities and characteristics of the race. The greater part of his success is undoubtedly due to his inventive genius and his tireless energy.

Had he remained in his own country it is not likely that he would have risen above the station of a master mechanic, but in the United States where merit is the only basis for promotion he has been an active agent in the promotion of civilization and gained wealth and fame for himself. Even that was doubtful as he would have been too young (for a Guess he is forty-five). He controls something over one hundred patents, some of which are very valuable and give him large royalty.—Ken. Journal.

Cost of Dr. Webb's Trip.

HOW A MILLIONAIRE RAILWAY PRINCE WILL SPEND NEARLY $170,000.

Every school-boy of ten years in this country has read stories of Oriental magnificence. He has instilled into his mind the splendor of ancient Babylon, the mighty wealth of Delhi, the luxury and pomp surrounding an Egyptian Khedive and the vastness of a Turkish Sultan's power. But none of these can compare with the grandeur of adornment that will surround Dr. W. Seward Webb on his trip across the continent of America. The millionaire railway prince started on his three months' tour Saturday afternoon at 3.30 o'clock from Grand Central Depot annex.

There was a large company of the doctor's friends and onlookers present when the four cars comprising the train smoothly rolled out of the depot. There was a glint of plate glass in the fading sunlight, a flash of lacquered work—then the train swept out of sight. The general public can have but a faint idea of the enormous expense entailed upon an enterprise of this character. Millions of persons would be more than satisfied could they but have the cost price of even one of these cars. The "Ellesmere," Dr. Webb's private car, is estimated by competent judges to be worth $35,000.

The piano alone, which was taken from the manufacturer's warehouse and placed on board the train, is valued at $1,200. The means of communication from one end of the train to the other is by electrical appliances, which were placed in position Saturday. Even this comparatively insignificant item involved an expense of $500. For the trip Dr. Webb has fitted the conductor, Col. O. Eastmond, with clothing especially made for this occasion. It consists of a blue-black uniform with a white vest and very large and handsome brass buttons. Six white vests go with this uniform and the whole outfit will run up a bill of a cool hundred dollars. Each of the porters, of whom there are twelve, has been also supplied with a vest and appropriate uniform, valued at $60. This brings the total for the uniforms up to $820.

It is the intention of the party to take a run over the Canadian Pacific road purely for the purpose of fishing. In order that the tastes of the party may be gratified in the most artistic manner twelve salmon and trout rods, made after the most approved patterns and containing the toughest and most pliable Bethabara and bamboo woods, have been purchased. These rods are valued at from $25 to $50 apiece. It will be seen that these rods alone are valued at $450. The guns carried by the party, in a closet made on purpose for their reception, are twelve in number—six rifles and six shotguns. The rifles are Spencers and the shotguns are made by Wesley Richards, the noted London gunmaker. These are valued at $60 each as they are made of the very finest material. Shells loaded for bear, deer and elk to the value of $300, also shells stored away for use when needed.

The porters have been selected not only for their skill as waiters upon the car, but also for their reliability as [illegible] in case of accident [illegible] themselves [illegible] Lamont [illegible] Dr. Webb [illegible] gun. The doctor's son, Frank Webb, said Saturday that there was no telling what emergency might arise during a trip such as the one projected, and so the porters were furnished with firearms. The total cost of the firearms and ammunition carried by the party will not fall short of $1,200.

An item of expense which is something more than a bagatelle is the provisioning of the princely caravan. Fresh meats, fish, vegetables and perishable meats of all kinds were stowed away in the capacious ice-boxes under the dining car yesterday which involved a total expenditure of $300 and which are expected to last fifteen days when the ice-boxes will be replenished at some distant city. Among the non-perishable goods stowed in the closets for future use are farinaceous goods of every description, potted meats, such as devilled ham, potted tongue, boned chicken, curried fowl, turkey hearts and dainties in cans sufficient to supply a small army. In addition to these luxuries there are sugar-cured hams from Westphalia, boneless bacon and smoked tongues. Succulent soups in cans, chocolates and crackers, which melt in the mouth, will be served to tickle the palates of these dainty aristocrats. One of the officials estimated that at least $1,000 had been expended for the above articles.

For intellectual food the little mahogany case in the corner of the "Marquita" contains a library valued at $500. The books have evidently been selected with judicious taste. The volumes embrace the whole range of literature, from "Uncle Tom's Cabin" to Hallam's "Middle Ages."

The expense involved in keeping such a luxurious caravan in motion day by day is a very difficult thing to estimate under the circumstances. Even Dr. Webb himself is partially in ignorance on this question. The trip is intended to cover 20,000 miles. The officials at the Grand Central depot say that the wages of Conductor Eastmond will be about $100 a month. Each engine carries with it a conductor and two brakemen, or trainmen as they are called. The wages of the engineers, who are paid at the rate of $5 for every 150 miles travelled, would amount to $607 for the whole 20,000 miles. The brakemen command $50 monthly. Dr. Webb will, therefore, be at an expense of $300 for brakemen.

It was said by Conductor Eastmond that an engine would consume about three tons of soft coal to each division—an equivalent of 150 miles. The wholesale price of this coal is about $2.75 per ton. Estimating on the basis, the total consumption of coal will be fully 400 tons, valued at $1,100. In addition to this expense which, of course, will not be felt by any man of Dr. Webb's means, there will be the cost of the sustenance of the porters and railroad men. As they will eat from the luxurious fare of the millionaire, the low estimate of $4 per week is placed upon the food they will consume, and nearly another hundred dollars will slip from the millionaire's pockets to satisfy the appetites of his helpers.

An item of expense which will probably not be entailed upon the Doctor is mileage over other roads than those he has an interest in. It is customary in all cases where private cars are run over a railway to tax a traveler eighteen fares for each car, no matter how many persons the vehicles may contain, over every division. It is probable that Dr. Webb will not have to pay this charge, but should he do so the cost would be about $31,000.

The splendid steamer Islander, which will convey the party up along the Alaskan coast, has been chartered for $450 per day. But this does not include the provisions which the party will consume. As the tourists will be twenty-six in number, Conductor Eastmond was of the opinion that at least $5 per day would be necessary to cover this item. Supposing the party to remain aboard the steamer for two weeks, as is the present intention, the millionaire will have to come down with nearly $2,000 more in order to keep his party from starving.

Cigars and wines of the choicest brands and vintages are safely stowed away in the coolers against the time when they strike the hot climate of New Mexico. Mr. Frank Webb is of the opinion that $1,000 would not duplicate the bottles of liquids and the fine brands of tobacco on board this palatial train. Of course, the greatest item of expense is the train pepper—four cars—which aggregates a total sum of $125,000 in value.

The following tabulated estimate of the total expenditure involved in this colossal pleasure tour, can be seen below at a glance:

The Historic Morris House.

MARION HARLAND DESCRIBES GEORGE WASHINGTON'S GERMANTOWN RESIDENCE—QUAINT WAINSCOTED ROOMS—WHERE THE WASHINGTON FAMILY TOOK TEA—RELICS OF THE FIRST PRESIDENT AND HIS WIFE—THE FAMOUS PITCHER PORTRAIT.

[Marion Harland in the Homemaker.]

Historian, painter and poet have made familiar to us the story of the imprisoned Huguenot, condemned to die from starvation, who was kept alive by the seeming accident that a hen laid an egg daily on the sill of his grated window. From this French Perot descended Elliston Perot Morris, the present proprietor of the old house on the Germantown Road, which is the subject of this sketch. It was built in 1772 by a German, David Deshler, long and honorably known as a Philadelphia merchant. A pleasant story runs that the facade of the solid stone mansion would have been brought by water, but the sylvan tastes of the owner allowed him to fell the primeval trees for the walls of the proposed city. The garden was the marvel of the region during the occupancy of the socially able and hospitable Deshlers, and the [illegible] by the [illegible] Deshler [illegible] Germantown [illegible] Lamont [illegible] Washington [illegible] scarred in the Revolutionary War. He had owned it but a year when the yellow fever broke out in Philadelphia, then the seat of the national government. Colonel Franks with his family retreated hurriedly to the higher ground and protecting mountain barrier of Bethlehem, although Germantown was considered a safe refuge by the citizens of Philadelphia. On the eve of the Franks' flitting, the Colonel received a communication from President Washington's man of affairs, offering to rent the commodious residence on the Old Road for the use of the President and his family. The patriotic cordiality with which the retired officer granted the request did not carry him beyond the bounds of careful frugality. He made minute mention in his expense book of the cost of sweeping and garnishing the house for the reception of the distinguished guests, also of "cash paid for cleaning my house and putting it in the same condition the President received it in." This last bill was $2.20.

COST OF TRAVEL.

From this account book we learn what were the expenses of transportation of Col. Franks and family back and forth to Bethlehem, and what was paid for the hired furnished lodgings in the mountain village. There, were lost during the Summer of exile (presumably under Lady Washington's administration) "one fathom, value 1s., one large fork, four plates, three ducks, four fowls," and consumed or wasted by the temporary tenants, "one bushel of potatoes and one cwt. of hay." These items swelled the bill for removals, hire of Bethlehem quarters, and rent of Germantown premises, to $131.50½.

The President, his wife, and their adopted children, George Washington Parke Custis and Nellie Custis, lived in health and peace in suburban quarters during the summer of the pestilence. The boy went to school at the Old Academy. The grounds of the school adjoined those of what was still known as the Deshler place. (A few days after) the transfer of the executive party from town to country, a group of boys playing on the pavement in front of the Academy parted to left and right, caps in hand, before a majestic figure that paused at the foot of the steps.

"Where is George Washington Parke Custis?" demanded the General.

Charles Wister, a Germantown boy, plucked up courage and voice and told where the great man's ward might be found.

Another boy of the town, Jesse Wain, went home from school with Parke Custis one afternoon and played with him in the garden, until General Washington came out of the back door and bade his adopted son "come in to tea, and bring his young friend with him." Nearly three-quarters of a century afterward an old man asked permission, upon revisiting Germantown, to go into the tea or breakfast-room, back of the parlors in the Morris house, and sitting down there recalled each incident of the never-to-be-forgotten "afternoon out." The grave kindness of the head of the household, the sweet placidity of the mistress and the merry schoolfellow whose liking had won for him this distinguished honor—this is the picture for which we are indebted to Mr. Wain's reminiscences.

LADY WASHINGTON'S HYACINTHS.

The negligé from Philadelphia must have taken place early in the spring, for Lady Washington pleased herself, and interested her neighbors, by raising hyacinths under globes of cut glass. There were six of these, and upon her return to Philadelphia she gave them to the young daughter of the deceased David Deshler, to whom she had taken an especial liking. A fragment of the glass is still treasured by a descendant of Catherine Deshler.

The occupation of the Morris house by the President and his family is the incident in the history of the homestead which abides most vividly with us as we pass from one to another of rooms which are scarcely altered from what they were in his day. The walls are wainscoted up to the ceiling; the central hall; the fine staircase at the right; the hinges mortised into the massive front door; the wrought-iron latch, eighteen inches long, that falls into a stout hasp over the portal; the partitions and low brows of the spacious chambers are the same as when the doors echoed to the tread of the Commander-in-Chief, and Ministers of State and Finance discussed the weal of the infant nation with him who will never cease to be the nation's hero.

We linger longest in the tea-room, which is the coziest of the suite. The wide-throated chimney is built diagonally across one corner; the fireplace is surrounded by tiles of exceeding beauty and great age. In another corner, on the same side of the room, with a garden-ward window between it and the chimney, is a cupboard which was also here in 1793. Behind the glass doors of this cabinet are the cup and saucer and plate of old India blue china, which were used on the evening of Jesse Wain's visit, with other choice bits of bric-a-brac. The rear window opening now upon a small conservatory, then gave upon a long grape arbor, running far down the garden.

THE WASHINGTONS AT TEA.

Between the drawing-room door and this window—the fair, extensive pleasure grounds, sleeping in the afternoon sunshine, visible to all at the table—the Washingtons took their "dish of tea" in security, shadowed only by thoughts of the plague-stricken city, lying so near as to suggest sadder topics than the sweet-hearted hostess would willingly introduce. It is an idyllic domestic scene and the lovliest for the cloudy background.

The "pitcher-portrait" of Washington, in the possession of Mr. Morris, was presented to his great-grandfather, Governor Samuel Morris, Captain during the War of the Revolution, of the First City Troop. These pitchers were made in France, and were tokens of the distinguished esteem of the General for those honored as the recipients. The likeness was considered so far superior to any other extant at that time, that an order for duplicates was sent to Paris when the first supply was given away. Unfortunately, the model had been destroyed after the original requisition was filled, and the attempt to reproduce the design was unsatisfactory as to likeness and execution, a circumstance which enhances the value of the originals.

Mr. Morris justly reckons as scarcely second in worth to this beautiful relic, an autograph letter from Washington to his great-grandmother, Governor Morris, the writer being the president of the First City Troop.

All business letters should be addressed to Boutelle & Burr, and communications intended for publication should be addressed: "Editor of Whig and Courier."

SATURDAY, APRIL 13, 1889.

Senator Sherman will sail for Europe on May first. He goes simply for rest and pleasure. He has no programme and says, "I shall go whenever fancy leads." He does not know just when he will return.

The free trade organs have lost their interest in the Rhode Island election. The election of a Republican Senator and a Republican majority in the next General Assembly has upset all of their predictions.

The Commercial Gazette brings cheering news from Ohio. It says: "In State affairs the Republican party is in magnificent shape—never better. The conditions are such now that any Republican nominated at the State Convention will be cordially supported by all the elements."

South Carolina shows gratifying signs of industrial progress. The value of the principal agricultural products of that State in 1877 amounted to $29,186,680, and in 1888 the aggregate was increased to $44,135,000. In manufacturing industries the increase is much greater. This is especially true in the line of cotton manufactories, the number of spindles increasing from 35,000 in 1870 to 250,000 in 1888. The time is not remote when "protection to home industries" will be the foremost political principle of the old Palmetto State.

Mr. Savage Landor, the artist, is achieving a brilliant success in Washington. He is at work on portraits of President Harrison, of the Chinese Minister, who is a relative of the Emperor of China, and of Miss Lincoln, the daughter of the Minister to the Court of St. James. After finishing these commissions Mr. Landor will go to Chicago for a brief sojourn, and from there he will continue his journey around the world. He will pass next winter in China as the guest of a high official potentate whom he met in Cairo, and who invited him to pass a season at his palace.

Some one signing himself "An old postal clerk" writes the New Age a letter criticising Superintendent Below. It is not surprising that a person who declares "there has never been so intelligent, able and faithful force in the railroad post-offices as now" that "taken man for man everyone of the present force is a better man for the service than the man he displaced," should be ashamed to give the public his name. It is a simple matter to write such drivel as the letter referred to, but when it comes to signing it an anonymous signature is usually thought advisable.

The Rev. M. L. Haines, of Indianapolis appears to be a level headed man. When the representative of the New York Evening Post undertook to interview him about the New York postoffice, the clergyman rebuked the piece of impertinence by saying that he could not express an opinion concerning a matter which he knew nothing about, but he did not hesitate to say that he could not conscientiously indorse the Post which he believed to be insincere. He hit the nail squarely on the head that time. The Post cares nothing for reform, but it has to give some excuse for remaining on the earth and this hypocritical pretense serves its purpose as well as any.

It pays to make politics a business in New York, says the Philadelphia Press. Richard Croker, who has just been appointed chamberlain of that city, illustrates this fact. He was tried not so many years ago for murder and escaped by a disagreement of the jury. He was "running" Mr. Abram S. Hewitt's canvass for Congress at the time of the trouble, and the influence of that gentleman was exerted to get the prosecution dropped. Croker's acquaintance with the worst element in the politics of that city has been useful to men like Mr. Hewitt, and they gave him a boost until now he is the successor of John Kelly as the Tammany "Boss," and gets a salary from the city of $25,000 a year. He has been an office holder for many years, and now practically dictates the officers of the city. He repaid Mr. Hewitt by making him Mayor, and then dropped him when that gentlemen refused to be a Tammany tool. He made Mr. Grant Mayor, who has now in return made Croker city chamberlain. Croker is said to aim to make Grant Governor and Hill President. He is a fine illustration of the machine politics that makes New York the most costly, if not the worst governed, city in the world.

A despatch from Arkansas City, Kansas, says: The population of this city has increased one-third in the past week. Two thousand eager boomers are here and there are at least another thousand along the line just south of this place. The half dozen hardware stores here have sold out their entire stock and the demand is not half supplied. The boomers are forming into small colonies of twenty-five to fifty persons and are devising schemes to outwit their neighbors and get into the heart of Oklahoma by the appointed time. There is a feeling all along the border that there will be a general forward movement into the territory on the night of April 20. Boomers who have been here all winter have picked out their land and they are suspicious of the newcomers. They have pickets now in hiding in the Oklahoma woods who are keeping them posted. Word was received to-day that the boomers on the Texas border were becoming impatient and that they were likely to march in before April 22 to seize their claims before daylight on that date. A panicky feeling prevails all around, and threats of a sanguinary character are made by old boomers. The State line for hundreds of miles is dotted with "prairie schooners." Many settlers, whose geography is faulty, are already from ten to fifteen miles in the territory and still claim they are in Kansas.

The Free Traders' Stock Argument.

[Irish World.]

Cheapness is the gospel of the free traders in the United States as well as England. The advocates of the pro-British policy of throwing open our markets to British cheap-made goods have been dinning into our ears the necessity of cheapness. That is their main argument with which they hope to win the support of workingmen. When they use it they claim to be granted that workingmen are not intelligent enough to see that if an era of cheapness like that promised should come it would be the workingmen who would lose as producers more than counterbalance their gain as consumers.

It is told of an English workmen that after listening to one of Cobden's free trade speeches he expressed his opinion of it by cursing the orator and declaring that what the latter and the class he spoke for wanted was cheap labor that would enable them to capture the markets of the world. The British manufacturers, unlike our manufacturers, do not depend upon the home market. They look to foreign markets in civilized and uncivilized lands, and if they can secure these markets they will not be much troubled by the fact that the home trade is diminished through English workingmen being compelled to curtail their expenditures on account of receiving small wages.

Indeed, the great body of British manufacturers would be glad if the English workingmen's standard of living were considerably lowered, for that, according to a well-known law of political economy, would bring about a lowering of wages, which in its turn would enable the British manufacturer to lay down his goods at the doors of his distant customers at a price that would defy competition. In this way would the boon of cheapness work out the great problem of making England practically the sole manufacturing country in the world.

The London Morning Post suggested recently as a means of bringing about this desirable result that English workingmen should learn to live on rice, which is an extremely cheap food. The Post, like our own free traders, is of course consumed by the desire of seeing English workingmen improving their condition. "A an article of food rice has," it says, "a very high value, and its extended use among the poorer classes is to be much desired. Of course it should not form a too exclusive item in the dietary of a poor family, but it certainly might with advantage to the health and pocket of the poorer classes figure much more frequently in the customary mixed dietary of the household than it does."

An English newspaper published in the interest of English workingmen, commenting on this advice, says: "The wages of the workers now average about 16s. 6d. for a family of five. Live on rice and you can do the same as the Indian coolies, subsist on two pence a day." This is the argument of cheapness in a nutshell. If English workingmen adopt the advice the London Post gives them they will in time accustom themselves to live on an exclusive rice diet. When they have done that they will reduce the cost of production to so low a figure that British manufacturers will find no difficulty in flooding the markets of the world with their goods.

In the meantime what matters it if the English workingman and his family have to pay the terrible price of a degrading poverty, to secure the triumph of British civilization? The thought of this price does not trouble free traders on either side of the Atlantic. It will be a sorry day for American workingmen if they ever allow themselves to be deceived by this specious argument about cheapness.

Long-Standing
Blood Diseases are cured by the persevering use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla.

This medicine is an Alterative, and causes a radical change in the system. The process, in some cases, may not be quite so rapid as in others; but, with persistence, the result is certain. Read these testimonials:—

"For two years I suffered from a severe pain in my right side, and had other troubles caused by a torpid liver and dyspepsia. After giving several medicines a fair trial without a cure, I began to take Ayer's Sarsaparilla. I was greatly benefited by the first bottle, and after taking five bottles I was completely cured."—John W. Benson, 70 Lawrence st., Lowell, Mass.

"Last May a large carbuncle broke out on my arm. The usual remedies had no effect and I was confined to my bed for eight weeks. A friend induced me to try Ayer's Sarsaparilla. Less than three bottles healed the sore. In all my experience with medicine, I never saw more Wonderful Results.

Another marked effect of the use of this medicine was the strengthening of my sight."—Mrs. Carrie Adams, Holly Springs, Texas.

"I had a dry scaly humor for years, and suffered terribly; and as my brother and sister were similarly afflicted, I presume the malady is hereditary. Last winter, Dr. Tyrou, (of Fernandina, Fla.,) recommended me to take Ayer's Sarsaparilla, and continue it for a year. For five months I took it daily. I have not had a blemish upon my body for the last three months."—T. E. Wiley, 146 Chambers st., New York City.

"Last fall and winter I was troubled with a dull, heavy pain in my side. I did not notice it much at first, but it gradually grew worse until it became almost unbearable. During the latter part of this time disorders of the stomach and liver increased my troubles. I began taking Ayer's Sarsaparilla, and, after faithfully continuing the use of this medicine for some months, the pain disappeared and I was completely cured."—Mrs. Augusta A. Furbush, Haverhill, Mass.

From Maj. J. G. Roberts, P. M., of Hudson, Penobscot Co.:

A. M. Nearly eight years ago she had a paralytic shock. Her limbs became numb and she was able to help herself but little. She remained in this situation until four years ago, when I recommended her to try BELL'S SARSAPARILLA. She continued using it until her health was fully restored. Her limbs are now as right and I feel that the medicine has prolonged her life. J. G. ROBERTS, P. M.

CANADIAN RECIPROCITY.

They Only Want It With a Big If.

OTTAWA, Ont., April 12. At 1.30 this morning the Senate concluded its debate on Senator Wark's resolution that it would be unjust to the United Kingdom to levy higher duties on goods imported thence than on goods of the same character imported from any foreign country. Mr. Abbott's amendment was adopted instead, 36 to 11. The amendment is that it would not be in the interest of Canada to establish entire reciprocity of trade with any foreign nation, upon any conditions which would restrict, with regard to others, the entire freedom of action of this country in protecting her own industries, in dealing with her own sources of revenue, in regulating her own foreign trade or which would necessitate the adoption of duties discriminating against imports from other portions more especially the mother country, while, at the same time, any measure for promoting reciprocity of trade with any or all the colonies in such products of the same country as may be freely imported to the advantage to both, would receive favorable consideration.

MALFEASANCE IN OFFICE.

Indictments Against Officials in Washington Territory.

Stolen Money Hidden in Singular Places.

PORTLAND, Oregon, April 12. This morning's Oregonian prints the following special despatch from Port Townsend, W. T.: The United States Grand Jury found twenty-five indictments against William Harned, ex-special deputy collector, eleven against Herbert F. Beecher, ex-treasury agent, and twelve against Quincy A. Brooks, for stealing from the government. The records and accounts were thoroughly overhauled and presented to the Grand Jury by Government officials, especially sent from Washington. The first thing found was that vessels were overcharged in entrance and clearance, and private receipts issued. Vessels were swindled out of small sums, amounting to a few dollars each, but aggregated many thousand dollars a year. Another part of the records was found where the payer charged in some instances many hundred dollars more than was credited. The largest steal discovered was for duties paid on the cargo of the British bark Madeira, from Liverpool, last June. Duty to the amount of $6,628 was paid and the Government received $5,044. The records indicated no money paid during the month. Harned admits appropriating money. After Harned was dismissed over $12,000 was found in various parts of the office, in flower pots, pigeon holes and other places. Records of daily receipts during the latter part of Beecher's time are missing from the office. Other records up to the time of Harned's dismissal, last November, are also gone, making it impossible accurately to determine the deficits. Brooks is short $15,000 in addition to illegal fees collected, amounting to another $15,000. All are specifically charged with extortion, removing public records and falsifying accounts.

Secreted Under Carpets,

Harned and Beecher to be Arrested To-day.

There are 638 opium stamps missing, valued at $5 each, besides a large number of Chinese return certificates. Harned and Beecher will be arrested to-morrow and each placed under $5,000 bonds. They refuse to make statements. Brooks is in Washington. Harned is worth $40,000 and has many warm personal friends on Puget Sound.

LIGHTNING, WIND AND HAIL,

Cause Loss of Life and Property.

PITTSBURG, April 12. A heavy thunder, wind and hail storm visited, portions of western Pennsylvania, eastern Ohio, and Maryland, to-day, doing considerable damage. At Elkgarden, Md., a flash of lightning instantly killed John Wetzell, a farmer, aged eighteen years, and two horses. At Franklin, Pa., a large iron tank, containing 3,000 barrels of naphtha, at the Union Refinery, was struck, and completely destroyed. At Masontown, Pa., the roof of the new $10,000 public school building was lifted off, plate glass windows broken, and store fronts blown in. At Steubenville, Ohio, hail-stones as large as eggs fell, breaking photographer's skylights and many windows. In this city no serious damage is reported.

Other Damages Reported.

At St. Clairsville, Ohio, the roof of Murdaugh's mill was rolled up like a ball and tossed fifty yards into a vacant lot. Several large plate glass windows in the court house were smashed to pieces. At Powhattan, Ohio, the storm struck Hannbrook's three story brick building and the roof was blown off. A Mr. Coleman, who was in the third story, was blown into the street and fatally injured. The roof of the Ohio River Railroad depot was blown off.

An Important Pension Decision.

Assistant Secretary Bussey to-day rendered a pension decision in the case of Nanny Brooks, mother of Jesse D. Brooks, late private in Company H, Thirty-Sixth Ohio Volunteers. The testimony shows that while the soldier and a number of comrades were bathing in Wheeling Creek, West Virginia, July 5th, 1863, the soldier got beyond his depth, and drowned. The application was rejected upon the ground that the death of the soldier had no direct connection with military duty. Assistant Secretary Bussey says: "I am of the opinion that the soldier was not out of the line of his duty simply by reason of his bathing in the creek under such circumstances. He was violating no order, neglecting no duty, and was acting in accordance with and in furtherance of the regulations of the service and the orders of his superior officers, requiring him to keep himself in a cleanly condition. The season of the year rendered bathing in the creek the most natural, reasonable and practicable method of complying with the orders."

FATALLY SCALDED.

LAWRENCE, Mass., April 12. A man named Robinson, thirty years of age, fell into a kettle of scalding dye at the Marland mills, Andover, this noon and will undoubtedly die.

In his advertisements people were led to believe that each subscriber to the Ladies' Bazar would receive a pair of kid gloves. The paper was sent to those sending the requsite 25 cents, but the gloves have not been received by numerous subscribers.

Stealing of the Meanest Kind.

LOWELL, April 12. At this afternoon's session of the police court Fred G. Milliken was held in $1,500 to the Grand Jury for embezzlement from the Mechanics' Lodge of Odd Fellows, of which he is Recording Secretary. The testimony showed that he had indulged in an outrageous and systematic embezzlement and managed to deceive the officers of the lodge, who implicitly trusted him. Much of the amount embezzled was sick benefits, due to brothers, and supposed to have been paid.

OCEAN STEAMER WRECKED.

Danish Steamer Danmark, from Copenhagen, Reported Abandoned at Sea.

The Report not Fully Credited at the New York Office.

QUEENSTOWN, April 12. The steamer City of Chester from New York, April 2d, for Liverpool, arrived to-day and reports that on April 8th she passed the Danish steamer Danmark, Copenhagen for New York, abandoned. Her stern was level with the sea. Her bow was high out of the water and she was apparently sinking. The Danmark was a vessel of 2,260 tons and belonged to the Thingvalla Line.

NEW YORK, April 12. The office of the agents of the steamer Danmark, reported abandoned at sea, has been thronged with people all the morning anxiously inquiring for later news of the vessel. The agents do not credit the report and have cabled the London agents for further particulars from the Copenhagen branch of the firm. The Thingvallaline is probably the largest emigrant line that plies between this port and Europe. The Danmark had on board when she left Christiansand for New York, on March 10th, 650 passengers, presumably all emigrants, besides the captain, R. M. Knudsen, and a crew of forty men.

The Agents Believe the Passengers Safe.

To the General Manager of the New York Associated Press, 193 Broadway, New York:

Dear Sir:

As some comments on the reported loss of the Danish steamer Danmark having been accompanied by heavy loss of life, we beg leave to state, for the benefit of all persons who have friends on board the ill fated boat, our belief to the contrary. When sighted by the City of Chester, on Monday last, the decks aft and sails were in pieces and the vessel was flooding. Although this reporting, steamer expressed the belief that she would shortly founder, this did not occur from the hour she was first sighted until last seen. The Danmark was floating in the track of trans-Atlantic steamers and we believe that beyond peradventure the passengers and crew were taken off at some time, probably as far back as a couple of days. Before she was sighted.

If the wrecked passengers and the crew had not been picked up they would, even if embarked in boats and on rafts, have remained in the neighborhood of the wreck, the presence of which would be much more likely to attract passing steamers than small boats or rafts. The City of Chester evidently did not find the slightest wreckage near the vessel attributable to smashed or otherwise incomparable boats, while the latter are born no sign of human life. It is confidently believed that, with the exception of single casualties such as may occur during the transfer of so many passengers from one vessel to another, the passengers and crew are safe and will ere long be heard of as being on board one of the trans-Atlantic steamers.

AN INTERESTING CASE.

Damages Recovered Against a Liquor Seller.

ST. ALBANS, Vt., April 12. An interesting case, under the civil damage act, was decided in the County Court to-day, of Richards vs. Moore. Plaintiff, a widow, brought suit to recover for the death of her husband several years ago, while intoxicated, on the ground that defendant, who keeps a hotel in East Berkshire, had sold him liquor, the drinking of which brought about the accident which resulted in his death. The case had been in court seventeen terms and before in a jury four times. At the third trial a verdict for plaintiff for $500 was given, but the Supreme Court set the verdict aside and ordered a new trial because one of the jurors was an alien. An especial jury to-day returned a verdict for $1,400 in favor of the plaintiff.

The Grand Lodge of Maine Free and Accepted Masons will hold its annual meeting in Portland on the first Tuesday of May, May 7. Temple Lodge, No. 86, of Saccarappa, has been invited to exemplify the work before that body.

The four-masted schooner Georgie McFadden arrived in this port yesterday morning to receive a cargo of 1,700 tons of ice from the house of E. & I. K. Stetson for Washington, D. C. She is a fine vessel, built last season, and takes a great cargo.

The following are the dates of notable feasts and fasts for 1889: Palm Sunday, April 14th; Good Friday, April 19th; Easter Sunday, April 21st; Low Sunday, April 28th; Rogation Sunday, May 26th, and Ascension Day or Holy Thursday, May 30th.

The crew which is engaged in breaking out the Canadian Pacific railroad, clearing the track of ice, etc., and which started from Greenville, had arrived Thursday night within about nine miles of Brownville. They are putting the track in as good condition as possible.

The Steamer Lewiston before returning to the city will receive a new coat of paint at Boston. The Penobscot and Katahdin will continue on the route until the 20th, when the Lewiston will run in place of the Katahdin, which will receive a renovating preparatory to the summer service.

The old church of the First Congregational society, of Brewer, is being divided into two sections and they will be moved by Mr. Elijah Low's men upon lots in the town and made over into dwelling houses. The work upon the new church will be begun just as soon as the old building is moved out of the way.

Our ice dealers inform us that ice sells readily at the present time at $1.50 per ton. Some of the companies are holding their ice for $2, but no higher price than that is now asked, and none has yet been sold at that price. Several vessels are on the way here to be loaded, and a few are now receiving cargoes.

The latest arrangement in writing paper tablets received at the book stores in this city is a tablet with the usual amount of paper, two blotters and a case for envelopes at the end, which can be doubled over the table. The arrangement is a very convenient one, as both paper and envelopes are contained in a compact space.

A committee of Houlton men will look into the matter of shipping freight from that place to Boston through St. Andrews and thence by vessel. The St. John boat would not have to go much out of her usual course to touch at St. Andrews, and to accommodate next summer's travel. Very likely boats will run regularly between the two points.

All United States licenses for the sale of both liquor and tobacco, expire on the 30th of April, and must be renewed within a month after that date. It is reported that a large number of those engaged in the liquor traffic, especially in the smaller towns, have become discouraged by the rigid enforcement of the State law and will probably not take out a license for the ensuing year.

A large party from New England will in a few weeks leave for Denison, Texas, which is situated just south of the Oklahoma Territory. Recently developed coal mines and rich farming lands promise soon

Advices from Greenville say that according to present appearances the ice will probably leave the lake about May 7th to the 10th, which is about a week earlier than usual. The weather is warm and delightful and the snow is rapidly disappearing.

The executive committee of the Cecilia Club met last evening and made arrangements for the coming benefit concert, which will occur about the first of May. A fine concert will be arranged and will be well worth the admission charged, as it is expected that the best talent in the city will take part.

The business at the Bangor Creamery is steadily increasing, in the receipts of cream and the output of butter, and the latter meets with a ready sale, without sending it out of town, although they are daily in receipt of orders from other places. It is used at two of our leading city hotels and sold at thirteen stores. Its quality is of the very finest.

We have received from the publishers, Houghton, Mifflin & Co., a copy of "The Open Door," Miss Blanche Willis Howard's new book, which is for sale by D. Bugbee & Co. There will undoubtedly be a large demand for the book, as all of Miss Howard's works are very popular in this, her native city, and elsewhere. A review of the book will be published hereafter.

Two truckmen yesterday forenoon in Mercantile Square became involved in a discussion which went through the stages of argument, abuse and fray in quick order. The one more to blame was thrown to the sidewalk by the other, who proceeded to caress the former's windpipe. A large crowd gathered to witness the scrap. Officers Gilman and Davis appeared upon the scene and arrested the one at fault in the matter.

At the Oriental Parlor will be offered for sale dainty specimens of art work and also useful domestic articles. Those who attend this very unique entertainment will find a feast for the eyes in the unusual attractions there presented, a feast for the ears in the fine music rendered and a feast for the inner man in the delicious viands there set forth. Bear in mind the Parlor, the like of which was never seen in Maine, April 30th, May 1st and 2d, in Norombega Hall.

Commercial travellers have novel ways of preparing patrons for their advent nowadays. One drummer for a grocery firm sends stylish notes printed on ordinary butcher paper and enclosed in an envelope of the same material. A spectacle runner sends a postal engraved with a neat cut of a mounted courier fired from the muzzle of a gatling gun and bearing on his saddle the name of the firm which he represents, while below is the proposed date of his call. Other devices for arresting the attention of the retailers are as unique as these.

The following item is given in one of our exchanges: Word has been received from Messrs. Barnum and Bailey, the owners of the show, which shows conclusively that they will not come farther east than Portland. The letter is dated New York, April 3d, and says: "We regret to inform you that in consequence of the excessive rate demanded by the Maine Central Railroad to take us to Bangor, we are reluctantly forced to abandon the trip. The show is so large and requires so many cars that we cannot afford to pay the rate demanded."

Mr. Harvey S. Gaskell, of Lockport, N. Y., died at his home last Monday. He was vice-president and general superintendent of the Holly Company, and was the inventor of the system of pumps now in use at the water works. He was for a time in this city when the water works were established and superintended the putting in of the system. During his life he had taken out thirty patents, all of much value, and he was an inventor of a high order. Mr. Gaskell was highly esteemed by all who knew him.

At the regular meeting of Queen City Council, U. F., No. 29, held in their hall last evening a pleasing literary and musical entertainment was given with a programme as follows: Piano solo, Miss Tucker; reading, Thomas Mea; banjo and harmonica quartette, Messrs. Cayting, Smith, Bleiben and Douglas; reading, Miss Minnie Perkins; piano solo, Miss Tucker; reading, Miss Ames; medley, quartette. The encores were numerous as they deserved to be. At the end of the programme refreshments of fruit and confectionery were served through the kindness of the socia committee.

A MERITED PROMOTION. It is always pleasant to hear of the success of Bangor boys abroad, and we know that it will be gratifying to the many friends of Mr. Frank Harriman, formerly of this city, and son of Mr. Jesse Harriman, to learn that he has been promoted to the responsible position of chief clerk of the Southern Hotel, St. Louis, one of the finest hotels in the country. He has been room clerk of the hotel for the past year, since leaving the West Hotel, Minneapolis, and was promoted to his present position upon the sudden death of Mr. Harry Willard. Mr. Harriman commenced clerking in the Globe, now Bangor Exchange, Hotel in this city, and has been very popular wherever he has been.

AT THE MAINE CENTRAL DEPOT. A crew of about fifty men is employed in different ways at the Maine Central depot putting in the steam heating apparatus, and it is quite an extensive piece of work. Outside some of the paving has had to be taken up and excavating done for the boiler house, while a six foot ditch is being dug under the floors for the return pipes. Considerable masonry will be needed for the foundation of the boiler house. The carpenters are engaged in cutting through the walls and floors for the pipes and it is quite a busy place about the depot through the day. With the exception of the piping work, for which Carman & Thompson, of Lewiston, have the contract, the work is being done by Bangor men. It will probably take about a month to complete the work.

THE Y. M. C. A. BUILDING. Nothing definite was arrived at in the meeting in the interest of the new Y. M. C. A. building yesterday. Many seem to think that a modern building of this kind that would add so much to the appearance of our city should be in a more conspicuous place than the one purchased. The friends of the Columbia street lot admit this, but as nothing more advantageous is obtainable they feel that the Association should proceed to build on this, the only available site. It certainly seems too bad when so much money has been raised in so short a time and our citizens generally seem so anxious to see the much needed building erected, that a satisfactory site cannot be secured. If this could be obtained doubtless the balance of the money could be raised at once and by the fall the Association could be ready for the work to [illegible]

The Sons of Veterans had a very pleasant dance at City Hall last evening and a good number attended. Music was furnished by Rowe's Orchestra and Messrs. F. E. Pottle, C. S. Head and C. E. Bagley, officiated as floor directors. There were fourteen numbers on the dance programme. The evening was passed very enjoyably.

General Secretary R. A. Jordan, of the Y. M. C. A., recently received a letter from a convict at the State Prison at Thomaston, which the writer concludes as follows: "I never shall forget your kindness to me while in the Bangor jail, and I hope to have soon an opportunity to return the compliment." Mr. Jordan is somewhat dubious over the letter, as he was unaware of any immediate prospect of his going to jail.

THE FIRST M. E. CHURCH ENTERTAINMENT. An appreciative company was very pleasantly entertained at the vestry of the First M. E. Church last evening, upon the occasion of the continuation of the entertainment and exhibition. The literary programme consisted of readings from Longfellow. This was interspersed with music. The following is the programme: Chorus; reading, "Life of Longfellow," Miss Sterns; duet, guitar and banjo, Miss Flanders and Mr. Patterson; reading, "Pegasus in Pound," Miss Roundy; reading, "An April Day," Miss Blaisdell; a song written by Longfellow, "Stay at Home is Best," was very finely rendered by Miss Alice Buckman; reading, "Children's Hour," Miss Annie Ayer; reading, "The Wreck of the Hesperus," Mrs. Winchester; song, Miss Peavey; reading, "My Lost Youth," Miss Cheney; reading, extract from "The Courtship of Miles Standish," Miss Drummond; chorus. The accompaniments were finely rendered by Mrs. J. B. Ayer.

THE SPORT BEGUN. As has been anticipated the salmon began to run up the Penobscot river earlier this year than usual, and catches in nets and weirs have already been reported, but although our sportsmen of the rod and fly have been on the lookout for several days, yesterday heralded the first fly fishing of the Penobscot salmon pool, and, as usual, Mr. F. W. Ayer bears off the honors, having landed yesterday afternoon two of the noble fish, one of them taken at a little past four o'clock, weighing eight pounds, and another an hour or so later, weighing twenty-one pounds. Half a dozen boats were out, but the salmon only rose to Mr. Ayer's flies. This is two weeks earlier than last season, when the first catches were made April 26th, and five weeks earlier than the year before, when the first catch was on May 17th. The news quickly spread around and was flashed over the wires to gentlemen abroad who have anxiously awaiting the opening of the season, and who will soon be here to again try their luck. A larger number of sportsmen are expected here than ever before, and a fine season is anticipated. The water is at a good pitch for fishing and in good condition, owing to the lack of rain, which would make the water high and turbid. We have made arrangements for full and accurate report of the catches at the pool this year, and shall give our readers a correct record of the results of the glorious sport which has made Bangor famous as a fishing ground.

AMUSEMENTS.

Uncle Tom's Cabin.

"Uncle Tom's Cabin" will be given this afternoon at 2.30 o'clock and this evening at the Opera House by the Peck & Fursman company, and an excellent performance of the still attractive play is assured. The Utica Herald says:

Peck & Fursman's Mammoth Uncle Tom's Cabin Company played to a large audience in the Utica Opera House last evening, and their presentation of the time honored drama was very creditable. The two Topsys were good, and the specialties of the two Marks created much laughter. A child actress, who is not five years of age, assumed the role of Eva, and rendered her part nicely. The other characters were well taken, and on the whole the performance gave great satisfaction.

The Private Secretary.

"The Private Secretary" will be the attraction at the Opera House next Tuesday and Wednesday evenings. The Brooklyn Times says:

William H. Gillette's famous comedy of the same name was ably presented last night at the Academy by a well selected company. When the curtain went down on the last night's performance it was an evening of good comedy and rolling fun. "The Private Secretary" is well-known to need any comment, as he has made the play famous with his impersonations of the "Secretary," while he has made a dangerous rival in Mr. [illegible]. This gentleman's acting, "make up" and gestures are thoroughly native to the old character he has to portray his many grimaces carry the play.

Haverly-Cleveland Minstrels.

An attraction at the Opera House next Monday night will be the Haverly-Cleveland Minstrels which come well recommended. The New York Telegram says:

The Haverly-Cleveland Minstrels attracted a large audience. The programme was of a high order. A great attraction of the evening's entertainment was the Imperial Japanese Troupe, chief among the performers being five diminutive Japanese, whose marvelous feats of dexterity on ladders and poles made the female portion of the audience hold its breath in expectancy of a catastrophe. The performance concluded with a grotesque acrobatic skit entitled "Trouble," by Messrs. Queen, Stowe and Randall.

"The White Shield."

Dr. Kate Bushnell will address mothers' meeting this afternoon at ½ o'clock in the First Baptist chapel and to-morrow evening at 7.30 she will speak to the general public at the Columbia Street Baptist church.

The circular of the W. C. T. U. gives the following explanation of the work of the White Shield Department, of which Dr. Bushnell has been appointed evangelist: "She speaks in the interest of social purity, and that implies in the main a discussion of the need of a single standard of virtue for both men and women; the need of better laws for the protection of the virtue of the young; the need of a better intelligence on the part of both parent and child in regard to many facts of physiology; the need of more stringent social laws for the removal of corrupt men from the society of the innocent; and the need of a more tender interest in the ruined and the outcast."

Miss Willard has written of her in the Union Signal as follows:

Dr. Kate Bushnell, National Evangelist to Department of Social Purity, has made two addresses to our town, to which I have had the privilege of listening. They were so unique and well considered, they breathed out her great, masterly heart, and reflected so truly her careful, deep, and wide-reaching thought, that I wish here to set it down as my conviction that if she has health, Dr. Bushnell is to become a mighty power for the sacred cause of social purity. There is no cant, no affectation, nothing hackneyed or stereotyped about her mode of thought or expression. She is fresh, vivid, magnetic and profoundly in earnest. Her Christ is by every [illegible]

Why Should We Fear?

BY REBECCA M. PIERCE.

Oh, why should mortals fear to enter
The staircase of the grave,
That leads from this dull realm of Time,
Unto a brighter, fairer clime,
Beyond Death's chilling wave?

Why should we shrink at Death's approach,
As from some dreaded foe,
And be by torturing fears dismayed,
Like children, who are sore afraid
Into the dark to go?

Ah! if the dread we might unlearn,
By narrow reasoning made—
Since death is natural as life—
A blest release from toil and strife—
We would be unafraid.

All unafraid alone to go
Across the swelling tide,
And willingly; for who has not
Some loved one, who is unforgot,
Upon the other side!

Death—it is truly, but a change;
A happier lot to share;
'Tis but to cast from us away
This poor and worthless garb of clay,
For one more pure and fair.

Why should we fear, when fears are vain?
To all humanity,
Death brings a balm for every pain;
It gives us back our youth again;
From bondage sets us free.

And knowing God is good and just,
Who doth his children keep,
We may, in perfect faith and trust,
When the dull earth shall claim our dust,
Lie calmly, down to sleep.

A GIRL'S MISTAKE

By MRS. G. BIGG-WITHER.

IV.

Miss Estcourt folded her work neatly, opened the lid of her work table, and put it in.

"I shall fill Carmen's room with flowers; the child loves everything beautiful."

She left the room, but presently returned, with scissors and a good sized basket, and passed out through the French windows into the gardens beyond. She was so engaged when her brother, returning from the stables, met her, basket in hand, laden with flowers.

"A rustic flower show, on, Marcia?"

"Yes, dear, in Carmen's rooms."

"Dear Marcia!" and he kissed her affectionately.

The day wore on. Sir Geoffry was impatient to be at the station as a school boy to be out of school. But everything comes to an end, even waiting, and taking the reins from the servant, he drove at a rattling pace. As he neared the station he could see the distant train and the track of the white vapor. Now it came nearer and nearer, and as he stood on the platform, the carriage containing Col. Massingbird and his daughter stopped exactly in front of him.

Out stepped the tall soldierly figure of his friend, and beside him,

Dear on her lips, and scarlet in her eyes,

Set as her clime, and shaky as her skies, stood Carmen, in a soft white gown and a straw hat with poppies that made her a vivid foreground. A pretty blush greeted his warm, strong grasp of her hand.

"Well, Estcourt, old fellow! Here we are. How is Marcia?"

"Well, and longing to see you both."

"Then the feeling is reciprocal. She is a cool and refreshing vision this hot, weary day."

"Papa, there is poor Hortense struggling with her feeble English over the luggage. She is trying to count her packages. Do, dear, go and help her."

Her father made off obediently while Sir Geoffry escorted Miss Massingbird to the carriage without, and watched with great pleasure the white robed figure and then the red sunshade that threw such rosy tints over her dainty face.

"Your maid can sit on the front seat, Miss Massingbird, by the side of old Dawson. He's as steady as old time, and warranted not to fall in love with the most coquettish of waiting maids."

"I do not think Hortense would have the faintest objection," answered Carmen in her mellow, laughing voice.

"No! How unfortunate! I ought evidently to have provided a young eidolon. Dawson is as deaf as a post, but makes up for that infirmity by keen eyesight."

"Here comes papa and Hortense hot and furried!"

Col. Massingbird took his place beside her, and their host sat opposite them. Hortense did try to get up an incipient flirtation with the ancient Jehu; but he nipped it in the bud by bawling out, at the top of his voice, "I'm hard o'hearing, miss!" and with this subsided into his usual taciturnity. Sir Geoffry laughed.

"That's not encouraging! Never mind, she can try her hand on my man Brown. He's a rare one for the soft sex."

"Is it Hortense of whom you are talking?" asked the colonel.

"Yes," answered Sir Geoffry, "she was trying it on with Dawson."

"Oh, she will take care of herself, never fear! She flirted with every waiter in the place at Wiesbaden. She is an arrant coquette."

They were close to Estcourt now, and there on the steps to welcome them stood Marcia.

"Ah, Marcia!"

"Herbert! And Carmen! Why, my love, I shall need a new introduction. It is ten years since I saw you last. You were a pretty little girl. And now—well, never mind!"

"I remember, dear Miss Estcourt, it was before I went to school, you were so good to me, and I loved to stay here."

"Well, dear," said the elder woman, kissing her, "I expect the pleasure was mutual. Welcome again. But come indoors out of the hot sun."

Miss Estcourt led the way into the cool, flower scented hall, where afternoon tea stood ready and cozy chairs invited rest.

Carmen instantly threw herself into one with a sigh of satisfaction, and gladly accepted the tea that Geoffry handed her, while the colonel and Marcia seemed to have plenty to say to each other.

* * * * * * *

"How lovely it looks out there, Sir Geoffry," said Carmen, pointing to the distant view, which the open doorway framed like an exquisite picture. A fountain was throwing up cool jets of water, that tossed and sparkled in the sunlight; round its old marble basin were soft green ferns and delicate mosses delightfully refreshing to the eye, while behind and beyond rose the sloping uplands, crowned with yellow cornfields, now ripe for the harvest; indeed, it had already commenced. The cloudless blue of the brilliant August day contrasted with the various tints of the just changing trees, to their rich autumn shades, except the oaks whose midsummer shoots still kept green and fresh. And over everything was that wonderful haze only seen in early autumn.

"It does seem so restful, after our hot, dusty journey in those stuffy carriages, to drink one's tea in this cool, old place. I feel I have a right to be lazy."

He looked down with fond approval at the graceful, careless young form; and it was with regret that he heard his sister presently say, as she came from the other end of the hall,

Till the last glimpse of the white gown had floated from his sight.

"Massingbird, would you like to see the stables? We shall just have time before dinner."

"Nothing better."

The two men walked away discussing the merits of a certain horse which Sir Geoffry had lately purchased, and which he intended should be solely devoted to Carmen's use.

Before the first gong had sounded that young lady had found her way to the old drawing room, low pitched, roomy, redolent of lavender and dried rose leaves. Miss Estcourt (in a pretty arrangement of gray silk and old lace) sat at the far end, near an open window, and watched the tall, graceful figure in its soft, clinging primrose silk draperies. She thought she had never seen a more lovely picture in the dear old room, graced to so many women of the house of Estcourt, than the one now advancing to meet her.

"Ah, Carmen, you remind me so of your mother. You have her very way of walking. The only difference I can find is that you are fairer and taller."

"I remember her too, although I was such a small child, and how she loved me; my pretty mother! Her Carmencita, she always called me! Ah, well! I wish she were here now."

Marcia kissed her affectionately. "Dear," said she, "you know you are your father's heart's delight."

"Yes, dear Miss Estcourt. We are everything to each other. He is so good, so indulgent."

"Carmen, here come the gentlemen," as Sir Geoffry and the colonel were seen making their way through the long gallery like drawing-room.

"We are late, Marcia!"

"No, dear. The gong has not sounded yet."

"There it is!" And the dinner was announced.

What a happy quartet they made, these four. To Marcia, the love of her youth was always a hero. To Carmen, Geoffry was a very Bayard of chivalry, tender, loyal, true. Whether it was the fifteen or sixteen years between their ages, or what not, certainly Carmen idolized him.

In these days she entirely forgot she had ever been through a ceremony of marriage with another man. It was so utterly a thing of the past, she determined to forget it, and really she was succeeding admirably.

"I hope you ladies will bring us our luncheon to-morrow."

"Most certainly we will."

"Where do you begin, Geoff?" asked the colonel.

"In the Ladymead, by the stream?"

"How many guns?"

"Six in, all. Young Gay is one. He will stay here for a few days. He comes to-morrow from Beauclere. You must have met Julius Gay often in town, Miss Massingbird!"

"Indeed, yes. I know two things about him: he is fond of quoting poetry and splendid at doing a play. Also, he is most kind hearted."

"Three things to his account, Carmen," said her father.

"True, papa! But women are not always logical or accurate."

"Accuracy is near enough."

"You have apparently forgotten, Geoffry, that Clara Gay accompanies her brother," put in Miss Estcourt.

"Upon my soul I did," answered Sir Geoffry, with a gay laugh.

But the very expressive smile in his blue eyes, as they rested on the primrose figure, explained the cause of his oblivion. Blessed are the absent!

Miss Clara Gay would hardly have forgiven this loss of memory. As it was, Miss Gay considered it unpardonable that at the age of 35 Sir Geoffry Estcourt should still be an unappropriated blessing. And as she was endowed with the usual amount of good looks, she intended to execute a good deal of business anent this particular visit.

When Carmen retired to rest that night her dreams were of Geoffry Estcourt; but they were ever marred by the all pervading presence of Allen Fitzclare. However, "dreams are but interludes which fancy makes," and as the morning rose, fair and bright, her dream vanished with the sun. And with the sunshine came Julius Gay and his sister Clara.

Miss Gay looked fresh and fair and rosy with her rapid drive. She was a pretty, typical English girl; light brown hair, good complexion, pretty blue eyes and a charming little figure, and most perfectly conscious of every good point. She had brought with her several killing gowns from Paris, and it must be confessed a pang of disappointment shot through her heart as she saw the beautiful presence of Carmen Massingbird standing in the wide hall doorway with the morning sun streaming down upon her. She seemed to be the very center of the little group. Julius Gay, without thought of his sister, jumped off the dog cart and rushed up the steps.

"Good morning, Miss Massingbird; this is an unexpected pleasure."

"Where is any author in the world Teaches such beauty as a woman's eye?"

"My beauty, though but mean, Needs not the painted flourish of your praise," answered Carmen with a bright laugh. "Mr. Gay, I absolutely forbid your quotations; you really must be suppressed."

Sir Geoffry had gone to assist Miss Gay to alight. "You have brought us charming weather for the first, Miss Gay."

"Yes, it is delicious. Have you a large party? How many guns?" asked the young lady, hardly giving her host time to reply.

"Six with your brother. Col. Massingbird, Harry Vere, Squire Huntley, Mr. Fairfax, of the Grange, and your humble servant." And with that he turned to her brother. "Come, Julius, I cannot allow even Miss Massingbird to keep you. Go in, man, and get some breakfast. We are only waiting for you to start."

"All right, I won't be a second." And he and Sir Geoffry passed swiftly through the hall where the other men were congregated.

"Look sharp, Gay," they called out. The young man nodded gayly, and hastily drinking a cup of coffee and breaking off a piece of roll, pronounced himself ready.

"Have something more substantial, Julius," said his host, pointing to the well spread table.

"No, thanks. I'm made of cast iron. Besides, I'm in training for the day's work. Ta, ta, Miss Massingbird! Au revoir!" with a farewell glance at Carmen, as he called out in hearty tones: "Do not forget the luncheon, ladies."

"We will not forget," said Carmen brightly, as she waved her handkerchief.

"Come in, my dear," said Miss Estcourt to Clara Gay, "you really must require some refreshments after your long drive, and so early too."

"It was only six miles, Miss Estcourt, and the morning was so delightfully fresh and crisp."

"There is always something deliciously pure and invigorating in the early scent of an autumn morning. In the spring it is the perfume of leaf and blossom; but the autumn is aromatic and pungent. Yes; I prefer the autumn."

"Ah, dear Miss Estcourt, you can speak from the experience of an early riser," said Carmen, still watching the ever retreating figures of sportsmen, beaters and dogs, as they made their way to the plantation and then became lost to sight. "We lose much of nature's beauty in our gay life in town," continued Carmen.

"Well, we enjoy it quite as much," observed Miss Gay practically. "I am sure I would not give up a ball for a sunrise."

"You can have both," said Carmen gaily, "if you only stay a ball out."

V.

Then the ladies, after Miss Gay had some refreshment, adjourned to Miss Estcourt's morning room with its sunny aspect, where their hostess left them for her daily confab with the housekeeper. By and by the two girls wandered out to the gardens and exchanged mutual confidences (broiled, bien entendu) as to their various experiences of their London seasons. Carmen did not think it necessary to inform Clara Gay of the unfortunate little ceremony of three years ago, neither did Miss Gay confess the disgust she experienced at finding Col. Massingbird's daughter the favorite guest of their bachelor host. Indeed, Clara Gay's private conviction was that Carmen Massingbird intended to swoop down on Geoffry Estcourt, whom she had intended for her own particular prey.

But Carmen was in sublime ignorance of the unfavorable view taken by Miss Gay. Indeed, she lived in an ideal world, where, like an enchanted princess, the prince of fate was at last coming to claim her. And she let herself glide down the stream of oblivion, and led her beautiful lotus life.

Two or three days passed; the house party was gay and bright. It seemed to Carmen that she had never tasted such pleasure. Everything ran on wheels. The gentle, unselfish hostess, Clara as bright as a butterfly and as pretty, who, if not the first person in the host's estimation, certainly was in that of Squire Huntley, a rather heavy, ponderous individual, but easily pleased, and greatly in love with pretty Miss Gay; and this young lady, being a diplomatist, kept him in reserve until she saw how events were going to arrange themselves.

As for Julius Gay, he asked nothing better than to sun himself in Carmen's smiles; while Sir Geoffry, in his mind's eye, saw the woman he loved, radiant, beautiful, his wife—receiving their friends. Col. Massingbird found a congenial friend in Mr. Fairfax, who had lately come into some property in the neighborhood, and being an old Indian, they plunged into their grievances and theories of Anglo-Indian life and were happy.

They were very delightful days. Perhaps they would never come again to some of them. Quien sabe?

* * * * * * *

"Carmen," whispered Geoffry as they separated on the softly moonlit terrace, "come down to the Lady's Glen to-morrow, after breakfast. I have something I particularly wish to tell you."

With a little access of color, Carmen answered, "I will come."

* * * * * * *

"Such a day! Cloudless, joyous!" Carmen threw open her windows and let in the dewy, scent laden air, and it gently lifted the heavy masses of her hair. "I wonder, what he wishes to tell me?" But the rippling smile round her saucy arched lips betrayed her. She knew what he wished to tell her, and she was deliciously happy. There was no shadowing of the evil to come, no cloud "bigger than a man's hand" on the horizon of her day.

Some years ago a Newburyport sailor named Carl Benjamin was wrecked on one of the largest of the Caroline Islands. He decided to make the Island his home, as there was no work to do and plenty to eat. The natives, who are very good natured, took kindly to him, and have made him their king. He is a somewhat scholarly man; and is diligently teaching the native English and the rudiments of civilized life. He has twenty wives and fifty children. Nothing, he says, would induce him to go back to his old home.

DISEASED BLOOD.

HUMORS, BLOTCHES, SORES, SCALES, CRUSTS, AND LOSS OF HAIR CURED.

Terrible Blood Poison. Suffered all a man could suffer and live. Face and body covered with awful sores. Used the Cuticura Remedies ten weeks and is practically cured. A remarkable case.

I contracted a terrible blood poisoning a year ago. I doctored with two good physicians, neither of whom did me any good. I suffered all a man can suffer and live. Hearing of your CUTICURA REMEDIES, I concluded to try them, knowing if they did me no good they could make me no worse. I have been using them about ten weeks, and am most happy to say that I am almost rid of the awful sores that covered my face and body. My face was as bad, if not worse, than that of Miss Boynton, spoken of in your book, and I would say to any one in the same condition, to use CUTICURA and they will surely be cured. Yes, you may use this letter in the interests of suffering humanity.

I feel it my duty to you and the public to state the above case. L. B. MCDOWELL, Jonesboro, N.C.

SYMPTOMS.

Swollen Glands, Enlarged Joints, Thick Lips, Inflamed Eyelids, Tumors, Abscesses, Enlarged Neck, Pale Complexion, Wasting of Flesh, Soft Muscles, etc.

The taint of Scrofula exists in the blood of nearly every person. It is hereditary, or may also be acquired by excesses, lack of pure air, good food, and cleanliness. Scrofula in every form manifests itself in different ways—often by Tumors or Swellings affecting the joints, glands and bones. Sometimes these swellings discharge an offensive matter, heal slowly, and often in healing leave an ugly, disfiguring scar.

It affects the eyes, causing the lids to become red and swollen. In some persons, the skin becomes dark and harsh. No disease needs to be guarded against more than this, for from it spring many diseases dangerous and difficult to cure. Ingalls' Vigorine is invaluable in driving this taint from the blood, tones up the system, and thus enables it to resist the disease. TO REMOVE, WHICH, USE

THE KING OF MEDICINE---THE GREAT AMERICAN CANCER CURE.

Cancer is the cumulation in the blood of all the deadly elements known to humanity. Its malignancy is unquestioned! By the old school of physicians it is called a malignant tumor and they prescribe only the knife for its cure. Never recommend anything for, the blood from which the cancer originates. Hence, scold after the operation it re-appears in a more malignant form, and the poor sufferer soon succumbs to the inevitable. Well may it be called the King of diseases, as death itself is called the King of Terrors. So any medicine acting through the blood that can cure such a disease ought certainly to be called the King of Medicines, and if it can cure the Stye of Disease it ought certainly to cure all lesser blood diseases such as diseases of the Skin, Carbuncles, Tumors, Bunches, Moles, Warts etc., also Enlarged Liver, Spleen, Kidneys, Prostate Glands, etc. It will give tone to the heart quicker than any medicine known by giving pure blood for that organ to act upon. It will give soothing natural sleep, to those who are restless, because it will purify blood so it can be carried to all parts of the system. It is the most perfect blood medicine known. It prepares the blood to throw off all old sores, all irritated eruptions of the face such as Eczema, Bronchitis, Irritable Throat or Weakness of the Lungs, Pimples, &c. It is a sure cure for Scrofula Humors, like pouring water on fire, therefore Pulmonary Consumption on this it finds its opponent here.

A PROCLAMATION

BY THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA.

A hundred years have passed since the inauguration of which our forefathers organized. At noon on the 30th day of April in the city of New York, and in the presence of the people, the oath was administered by Chief Magistrate of the United States, and the first President of the United States delivered his inaugural address. Chief Justice Robert R. Livingston administered the oath of office. Immediately after the President, the Chancellor, the Governor of the State of New York, the Senate and House of Representatives, the Judges of the Supreme Court, the Heads of Departments, the Foreign Ministers, the Governors of the States, the Mayor of the City of New York, the Clergy, the Army and Navy, and the People, in the order named, proceeded to St. Paul's Church, where Divine service was performed by Bishop Provoost, assisted by the Chaplains of Congress.

Now, therefore, I, Benjamin Harrison, President of the United States of America, in pursuance of the resolution of the Congress of the United States, do hereby appoint Tuesday, April 30, as the day for the commemoration of the inauguration of George Washington as President of the United States, and I recommend that the people of the United States, in their respective places of worship, on that day, unite in rendering to Almighty God their thanks for the blessings which he has bestowed upon the people of the United States during the first century of their existence under the Constitution, and implore the continuance of His favor and protection to the nation in the future, the preservation of religious freedom, and the blessing of peace and happiness among all men and nations.

In witness whereof I have hereunto set my hand and caused the seal of the United States to be affixed.

Done in the city of Washington this 25th day of April, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and eighty-nine, and of the Independence of the United States of America the one hundred and thirteenth.

BY THE GOVERNOR:

A PROCLAMATION

In accordance with an old established and appropriate custom, I do hereby, with the advice and consent of the Executive Council, designate

THURSDAY, the 25th Day of April Inst.,

—AS A DAY OF—

FASTING AND PRAYER,

And I recommend to the people that on said day, ceasing from their ordinary vocations and secular pursuits, they assemble at their family altars and usual places of public worship, and unite in religious devotion in fasting and prayer, that reverently acknowledging the Supreme Being as the Ruler and Father of all, to whom implicit obedience is always due, and without whose care there can be no true prosperity in the Home nor in the State, humbly acknowledging our sins and earnestly praying for Divine forgiveness, may we earnestly and unitedly resolve to be guided by truth and justice both in private and public life, and thus faithfully discharge the duties we owe to our Heavenly Father and to our fellow men.

Given at the Council Chamber, at Augusta, this eighth day of April, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and eighty nine, and of the Independence of the United States of America the one hundred and thirteenth.

A GIRL'S MISTAKE

By MRS. G. BIGG-WITHER.

I.

A youthful pair of lovers, whose united ages only made thirty-six years, were clinging in a last embrace. The evening sun had grandly set, its last beautiful beams almost melting in the far stretched sea, which reflected in its deep waters the ever changing tints.

Even the dark, stern pine wood took a tender shade, as one by one the exquisite colors faded to be succeeded by others. It touched the girl's face, so childish in expression, so dainty in coloring, lighting up with ruddy tinge the rich brown hair, the dark velvety eyes, the fine sun tinted skin, the full pliant figure. In a word, it threw into bold relief that charming little personage, Carmen Massingbird.

The boy's face was handsome, sensitive, visionary, beautifully modeled, like some Greek Apollo, and his figure, though now loosely knit, gave promise in the years to come of a grand development. His arm tenderly encircled the young girl, but this face was sad and wistful.

"Oh, Carmen, think of me when I am gone, be true to me!"

"Be true to you! Oh, Allen, of course I will. If I am to be your wife to-morrow I must be, you know. All wives are true to their husbands."

"Oh, all," he answered, with superior wisdom. "And then, dear, you are so beautiful, and I have nothing to shield you but my love, and alas! I shall be thousands of miles away."

The girl, for want of a comforting answer, leaned her head lovingly on his shoulder.

"Is not this sunset perfect? I shall never forget it, our last, perhaps, for years. See, Carmen," he continued dreamily, "how those opal tints fade into the rosy ones, and then how they all roll in the calm, quiet sea. Oh, sweetheart, whenever you see such a sunset think of this night, for it be a sign between me and you."

"I shall always remember you, Allen," whisper the girl of simple nature. But, dear, do try and make this fortune soon, so that you can throw your hat into the air outside. Why! I shall be quite an heiress myself when I am your wife, and then we can live in a cottage with roses round the door, and I will sing to you all the dear old songs you love so well."

With a heavy sigh he slowly made his way down the zigzag pathway into the town, whose lights were twinkling in the summer night. Certainly, he did not look like a bridegroom-elect.

Allen Fitzhugh was an orphan, the last of his race; a race that had in the years gone by been powerful and rich. Now they were absolutely unknown. A distant relative, recently deceased, had left him £500. And with this majestic fortune he intended to go to the colonies and make it bring forth a hundred fold, to be laid at the feet of his beautiful Carmen—for hope with goodly prospect feeds the eye, shows from arising ground possession nigh. He was only 19, and with the charming confidence of youth imagined himself a poet in embryo, and a fit mate for the only daughter and heiress of Col. Massingbird, now in India.

The love of these two young people was like an arcadian poem, there was nothing material about it, it was love, pure and simple. They never troubled themselves as to any probable anger of relatives, it was their own delicious secret. And to-morrow, even if they separated, on the threshold of their marriage, they would still occupy the exalted position of man and wife.

She kissed him lovingly.

Next morning they repaired to the registrar's and were made one. The registrar shook hands with them and wished them every happiness, but he thought, as he pocketed his handsome fee, "they were the youngest (and handsomest) couple he had ever seen who had reached the mature age of 21 years." And with this reflection he dismissed them from his thoughts.

II.

A year had passed. Carmen Massingbird was to leave school. Her education, so far as actual school work was concerned, was completed.

Col. Massingbird had returned from India, entered parliament, and was now anxiously awaiting the companionship of his cherished daughter and only child.

Carmen had greatly improved this last year. She was now above the medium height, and her figure perfectly proportioned, a tall, graceful woman. She heard constantly from her young husband, letters full of love and enthusiasm. He had entered into partnership with a man of a high station, and hoped to realize the great fortune which was ever present in his imagination. Carmen wrote pretty frequently. Now that she was leaving school for her father's house, arrangements had to be made about the letters this cause, as regularly. So her school friend, Emily Lafdard, undertook to forward them, under cover of her own (though this young lady was in happy ignorance of the relationship of the two correspondents). This satisfactorily accomplished, Miss [illegible] dismissed from her mind any further thought of the matter.

When next met it is to find her, as all school girls the day they leave school! One does, as it were, a mental review of the lovely, unclouded future. What grand possibilities exist for them! What unraveling of mysteries! [illegible] dull life for both of them.

This was the beginning of a very delightful life. Month after month rolled on.

Carmen was presented at court, under the chaperonage of the Lady Catherine Massingbird, and very soon became one of the "beauties." The beautiful Miss Massingbird was to be seen everywhere, no dance, no theatre, no club afternoon on the Thames was considered complete without her charming presence. Young, rich, gay, lovely, who can wonder she was so happy, when the world turned its fairest side to her?

The boy husband seemed further and further away. Her letters grew less frequent. Now and then a vein of sadness ran through his replies, sometimes a tender reproach. At length she wrote and told him not to waste a further thought on her, she was not worthy of it, furthermore, they had both committed a foolish piece of imprudence, and it would be best for each to go their own way and forget it all. To this last there came no reply. Indeed, Carmen did not wish one. She was only too anxious to banish the secret marriage from her very heart and thoughts. She considered it an affair of the past, romantic, stupid, besides—

Among the many admirers of Miss Massingbird was one who was surely, if slowly, making his way into her heart, and his name was Sir Geoffry Estcourt, a man of about five-and-thirty, with an old title and estate, and who was likewise a dearly loved and valued friend of her father.

It was with growing pleasure that Col. Massingbird watched the intimacy ripening between his daughter and his friend. At first Carmen liked Sir Geoffry for her father's sake, now—now, she began to like him on his own account. Col. Massingbird felt that if he must part with his cherished child, let it be to this man, whose nature, loyal and true, he knew full well.

Sir Geoffry Estcourt in his younger days had dearly loved a fair young girl; but before the marriage could take place, death claimed the bride. The disconsolate young lover wandered about for years, seeking oblivion for his miserable soul, now here, now there. At length one may conclude he found it.

For after a lengthened sojourn abroad he returned once more to his country, looked after his heritage and in a quiet way enjoyed life. But when Carmen Massingbird appeared on the scene, it was like a magician's wand passing over his heart and changing everything. Everything was pervaded with her presence. Her sunny, careless nature, her charming, merry ways threw a magic spell over him. Yes, he was bewitched.

As yet he had uttered no word of love. He thought so humbly of himself, could this beautiful, spoilt young girl, ever be brought to love him? He almost doubted it. And he was afraid to disturb the sweet serenity of their daily lives, the charming familiarity of the home circle, where he was one of the most privileged of friends, the firm intimate of the house. No! He would wait a little longer, and she was so young. Probably had there been another suitor in the field he would have tempted fortune. But while she had plenty of admirers, she had no particular tenderness for any one. And was she not carefully hemmed in by a wall of guardians? Her father, Lady Catherine and himself. Dear Cousin Adela did not count at all. She looked after the young lady at home, in other words, let her do precisely as she liked.

When Lady Catherine was incapacitated by indisposition or other contretemps from chaperoning her young grandniece, then Cousin Adela's services were in requisition, very much to their owner's regret. She had neither the making of a chaperon, nor of a lady of fashion, whereas Lady Catherine Massingbird was, so to speak, to the manner born; and many an eligible partie had been brought forward with perfect success. Lady Catherine was considered a most diplomatic and clever match maker; and many a Bolgravian mother owed her a debt of gratitude (which was generally paid in kind). She was a skilful general, and deserved everything. But her ladyship was in despair about her grandniece, for who so willful as Carmen, or who so utterly inconsequent as to results as Col. Massingbird? And the season was over, the season, that ought to have done such great things for Miss Massingbird. And it grieved Lady Catherine.

People were rushing hither and thither in search of health, distraction, amusement, some to get rid of their friends, others of their creditors. The Massingbirds, father, daughter and aunt, spent a delightful month at Wiesbaden. This resort was chosen by Lady Catherine for her own particular benefit; she really intended taking the waters, and her nephew and grand niece were quite satisfied to enjoy themselves in their own way. Her ladyship felt that she had quite earned this little relaxation, and Col. Massingbird was only too pleased to serve his aunt. And now the feast of St. Partridge was at hand, so the colonel, who was a keen sportsman, set his face homewards, and with him Carmen. Lady Catherine was due at various country houses, but, all being well, they would meet again the following winter.

It happened that the last day of August found Sir Geoffry busy in his library, polishing up and overhauling his guns, ready for the "first." There was a happy smile on his pleasant, sunburnt face. He looked the very type of an English gentleman, good, calm, self reliant, and as he stood there, in the warm, mellow light of the August day, his heart was filled with joyous anticipations, visions of happiness that stretched around and onward, into the coming years. A knock at the door interrupted his day dreams.

"A telegram, Sir Geoffry."

"Wait a moment, Brown," as he tore it open. "All right, no answer. Where is Miss Estcourt?"

"In the morning room, Sir Geoffry."

"Thanks. That will do. But see to these guns, and put them carefully in their cases." And then he walked off with his telegram and made for his sister's sitting room.

"They will leave by the 3:10 train from Waterloo, and be here by dinner time. MARCIA."

"I am very glad, Geoff, dear. Their rooms are quite ready," said Miss Estcourt watched the happy smile on her brother's face, she reached his head down to her level and kissed his forehead.

"God bless you, Sean," she said.

There was no need for more words. A tender and true love existed between these two. Miss Estcourt was a stately, gentle woman, long past the age when [illegible] with a proposal, and [illegible] with a proposal, and [illegible] with a proposal, and Medicine for Throat and Lung Difficulties has long been, and still is, Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. It cures Croup, Whooping Cough, Bronchitis, and Asthma; it soothes irritation of the Larynx and Fances; strengthens the Vocal Organs; allays soreness of the Lungs; prevents Consumption, and, even in advanced stages of that disease, relieves Coughing and induces Sleep. There is no other preparation for diseases of the throat and lungs to be compared with this remedy.

"My wife had a distressing cough, with pains in the side and breast. She tried various medicines, but none did her any good until I got a bottle of Ayer's Cherry Pectoral, which has cured her. A neighbor, Mrs. Glenn, had the measles, and the cough was relieved by the use of Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. I have no hesitation in recommending this to every one afflicted."—Robert Herton, Foreman Headlight, Morrilton, Ark.

"I have been afflicted with asthma for forty years. Last spring I was taken with a violent cough, which threatened to terminate my days. Every one pronounced me in consumption. I determined to try Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. Its effects were magical. I was immediately relieved, and continued to improve until entirely recovered."—Joel Bullard, Guilford, Conn.

"Six months ago I had a severe hemorrhage of the lungs, brought on by an incessant cough which deprived me of sleep and rest. I tried various remedies, but obtained no relief until I began to take Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. A few bottles of this medicine cured me."—Mrs. E. Coburn, 10 Second st., Lowell, Mass.

"For children afflicted with colds, coughs, sore throat, or croup, I do not know of any remedy which will give more speedy relief than Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. I have found it, also, invaluable in cases of Whooping Cough."—Ann Lovejoy, 1257 Washington street, Boston, Mass.

BAD COMPLEXIONS.

The Secret of their Cause Fully Explained—Why Ladies are Sallow and Men Pallid—Some valuable Facts on the Subject.

In passing along the leading streets in almost any city in America to-day, one will meet with but few ladies who have clear complexions. Many persons have tried to account for this sad fact because of the severe climate of America, but such reasoning is wrong. A bad complexion is caused by impure blood, and no lady can be really beautiful and no man really manly, who has diseased or impure blood.

The best known way of keeping the blood pure is by keeping it circulating. In this way it passes rapidly through the lungs, kidneys and liver, and is consequently purified. But supposing the system is clogged up as it frequently is, the consequence of course the blood becomes impure. Then far too often men and women take some powerful purgative, pill, or other substance, that clears the body quickly, weakens the stomach, and leaves the system in worse condition than before. The only sensible way is to take a gentle, pure and natural purgative, moderately but regularly, and the blood will soon be free from all impurities. The city nerve that the genuine imported Carlsbad Sprudel Salt is infinitely superior to any other natural preparation known to the world. It is gentle, yet searching; it is pure yet powerful. Containing only natural properties, being evaporated from the celebrated Carlsbad Sprudel Spring, it cannot injure the body; but the least, and it has never failed to renew life, purify the blood and thus clear the complexion. Hundreds of doctors have given it their unqualified endorsement; thousands of people for each year to the Carlsbad Springs, but they can obtain no greater benefit than by taking the Carlsbad Sprudel Salt in its powdered form, such as can be procured at any drug store in the land. When it is considered that the Carlsbad Salt costs, practically, little more than the cheap, unendurable and often injurious Salts, purgative pills and potions that are in the market, one bottle being sufficient for nearly a month, all persons who keep pace with the times and desire only what is best, will see that it is to their interest to use only the Carlsbad. Each bottle is in a light blue paper cartoon and has the signature Eisner & Mendelson Co., sole agents, on every bottle. Obtain better information upon receipt of one dollar. OLD PAPA

The Other Englishman

For I felt, when he was gone that we were a sorry pair. I suppose that my companion, had as his case had seemed before, had yet cherished strong hopes of escape. Now he was utterly unmanned. He sat on the couch, his elbows on his knees, his head resting on his hands, the picture of despair. The pistol had disappeared into some pocket, and although capture meant death, I judged that he would let himself be taken without striking a blow.

My own reflections were far from being of a comfortable nature. The man groveling there before me might deserve death; knowing the stakes, he had gambled and lost. Moreover, he was a complete stranger to me. But he was an Englishman. He had trusted me. He had spent—well, an hour, but it seemed many—in my company, and I shrank from the horror of seeing him dragged away to a violent death. My nature sorevolted against it that I forgot what the consequences to myself of interference might be.

"Look here," I said, after a long interval of silence, "I will do what I can to help you. We shall not reach Carthagena until 8 o'clock at earliest. Something may turn up before that time. At the worst I have a scheme, though I set little store by it, and advise you to do the same. Put on those clothes in place of those you wear." I handed to him a suit taken from my portmanteau. "Wash and shave. Take my passport and papers. It is just possible that if you play your part well they may not identify you and may arrest me, despite your friend upstairs. For myself, once on shore I shall have no difficulty in proving my innocence."

Not that I was without my misgivings. The Spanish civil guards have the name of giving but short shrift at times, and even at the best I might be punished for connivance at an escape. But to some extent I trusted to my nationality, and for the rest, the avidity with which the hunted wretch at my side clutched at the slender hope my offer held out to him, drove any last hesitation from my mind.

As long as I live I shall remember the scene which ensued. The gray light was beginning to steal through the port hole, giving a sickler hue to my companion's features, and making my own trembling fingers, as I helped him to dress, seem to myself strangely wan and thin. A heavy odor from the expiring lamp hung upon the air. The tumbled bed clothes, the ransacked luggage, the coats swaying against the bulkheads to the music of the creaking timbers, formed and encourage deeply imprinted on the memory.

About 7 o'clock I procured some coffee and biscuits and a little fruit, and fed him. Then I gave him my passport and papers, and charged him to employ himself naturally about the cabin. My own plan was to be out of the way, ashore or elsewhere, when Sleigh should spring his mine, and to trust my companion to return my luggage and papers to my hotel at Malaga, until I reached which place I must take my chance. I may seem to have been playing a fine and magnanimous part, but looking back now, I do not think that I believed for a moment that the police would be deceived.

A little after 8 o'clock I went on deck to find that the ship was steaming slowly in between the fortified hills that frown upon the harbor of Carthagena, a harbor so grand and spacious that in its amphitheatre of waters I fancy all the navies of the world might lie. For a time the engineer was not visible on deck. The steward had pointed out to me some of the lions—the deeply embayed arsenal, the distant fort high perched on a hill, which the mutineers had seized, and the governor's house over the gateway where the wounded general had died—and we were within a couple of yards of the wharf, crowded with idlers and flecked with sentinels, when Sleigh came up from below.

Although the morning was fine and warm, he was wearing the heavy pea jacket which I had seen in the engine room. He cast a spiteful glance at me, and then, turning away, affected to busy himself with other matters. I think that he was ashamed of the work he had in hand. Bad as he was, I think so.

"Do we stay here all day?" I asked the steward.

"No, senor, no. 'Hasta las diez solo,'" I understood him to say. Only until 10 o'clock, and it was close upon 9 already. He explained that the town was yet so much disturbed that business was at a standstill. The San Miguel would merely land her passengers by boat, and go on at once to Almeria, where much cargo awaited her. "Here is the police boat coming," he added.

Then the time had come, too. I was quivering with excitement—and with something else—a new ideal Darting from the steward's side, I flew down the stairs, through the saloon and to my cabin, the door of which I dragged aside impatiently. "Give me my passport—my papers!" I cried, breathless with haste, "the police are here!"

The man—he was pretending to pack with his back to the door, but at my entrance rose with an assumption of ease—drew back. "Why? will you desert me too?" he muttered, his face working piteously. "Will you betray me? Then, my God! I am lost!" and he flung himself upon the sofa in a paroxysm of terror.

Every moment was of priceless value. This a conspirator, indeed! I had no patience with him. "Give them to me!" I cried imperatively, desperately. "I have another plan. Do you hear?"

He heard, but he did not believe me. He was sure that my courage had failed me at the last moment. But—and let this be written on his side of the account—he gave me the papers; it may be in pure generosity, it may be because he had not the spirit to resist.

Armed with them I ran on deck almost as quickly as I had descended. I found the position of things but slightly changed. The police boat was now alongside. The officer in command, attended by two or three subordinates, was coming up the ladder. Close to the gangway Sleigh was standing, evidently waiting for this group. But he had his eye on the saloon door also, for I had scarcely emerged from the latter when he stepped up to me.

"Have you changed you mind, governor? Are you going to buy him off?" he muttered, looking sardonic at me as I still moved forward with him by my side.

My answer took him by surprise. "No, senor, no!" I exclaimed loudly and repeatedly—so loudly that the attention of the group at the gangway was drawn towards us. When I saw that this was effected, I stepped hastily in front of Sleigh, and before he had any clear notion of what I was doing, I was at the officer's side. "Stop!" I cried, raising my hand, "in the name of Prince—"

"Parbleu, monsieur," he interrupted, politely restraining my hand—for I am a Englishman, you see, I think, speaking in French, and I will not be guilty of any unbecoming haste—"parbleu, monsieur, I am in the service of his majesty the King of Spain, and I obey no orders but those of my superiors."

"I understand," replied the officer. And, turning to Sleigh, who, shut out from the knowledge of what was going forward, was fuming and fuming in a fever of distrust, he addressed some words to him. He spoke in Spanish and quickly, and I could not understand what he said. That it was to the point, however, the engineer's face betrayed. It fell suddenly on the instant, and he cast a vengeful glance at me.

That which followed was ludicrous enough. My heart was beating fast, but I could not suppress a smile as Sleigh, clasping the threatened contraband, backed from the police. He poured out a torrent of fluent Spanish, and emphatically denied, it was clear, the charge; but, alas! he cherished the cost at which the police were making tentative dives—overmuch for an innocent man with no secret pockets about him.

His "No, senor, no!" his "Por dios!" and "Madre de Dios!" and the frost, were breath wasted. At a sign from the now grim looking officer two of the policemen deftly seized him, and in a twinkling, notwithstanding his resistance, had the thick coat off him and were probing its recesses. It was the turn of the bystanders to cry, "Madre de Dios!" as from pocket upon pocket came watch after watch, until five dozen lay in sparkling rows upon the deck. I could see that there were those among the ship's company besides the culprit who gazed at me with little favor, but the eyes of the police officer twinkled with gratification at each second added to the rich prize. And that was enough for me.

Still I know that all was not done yet, and I watched keenly what was passing. Sleigh, taken into custody, had desisted from his disjointed prayers and oaths. I perceived, however, that he was telling a long story, of which I could make out little more than the word "Inglese" repeated more than once. It was his turn now. If he had not understood my French, neither could I understand his Spanish. And I noticed that the officer, as the story rolled on, looked at me doubtfully. I judged that the crisis had come and I interfered. "May I beg to know, sir, what he says?" I asked courteously.

"He tells me a strange story, Mr. Englishman," was the answer; and the speaker eyed me with curiosity, but not unfavorably. "He says that Morrissey, the villainous Englishman—your pardon—who was at the bottom of the affair of last Sunday, has had the temerity to return to the scene of his crime, and is on this vessel."

I shrugged my shoulders. "A strange story, indeed!" I answered. "But it is for monsieur to do his duty. I am the only Englishman on board, as the steward will inform you; and for me, permit me to hand you my papers. Your prisoner wishes, no doubt, to be even with me!"

He nodded brusquely as he took the papers. That upon which I had counted happened. The engineer in his rage and excitement had not made his story plain. No one dreamt of his charge being aimed against another Englishman. No one knew of another Englishman. The steward silently corroborated me when I said I was the only one on board, and to all who heard Sleigh—allgatly bedogged, perhaps, by his Spanish, which, good enough for ordinary occasions, may have failed him here—did not doubt that his was a pure counter accusation preferred on revenge.

No doubt the improbability of Morrissey's return had some weight with them. Then my credentials were ample and in order. Among them, too, a note for 250 pesetas had somehow slipped, which had disappeared when they were handed back to me. Need I say after this how it ended? Or that while the police officer bowed his courteous "Adios" to me, and his men gathered up the watches, and the crew scowled, the prisoner was removed by force to the boat fairly foaming at the mouth, and screaming out to the last horrible threats which my ears were long in forgetting. I walked up and down the deck, brazening it out, but very sick at heart.

However, the San Miguel, despite her engineer's mishap, duly left in half an hour—a nervous half hour to me. With a thankful heart I watched the fort crowned hills about Carthagena change from brown to blue, and blue to purple, behind us, until at length they sank down in the distance.

But officers and men looked coldly on me; and that evening, at Almeria, I took up bag and baggage and left the San Miguel. I had had enough of the thanks, and more than enough of the company, of my cabin fellow, whom I left where I had found him—or nearly so—behind the sailcloth. I believe that he succeeded in making his escape; not that I have since seen him or heard from him. But fully a month later a friend of mine staying at the Hotel de la Paz, at Madrid, was placed under arrest for some hours on suspicion of being Morrissey, so that the latter must at that time have been at liberty.

THE END.

Blew All the Ladies.

A street car going west on Madison street last Saturday afternoon was loaded with women returning from the matinee. In one corner of the car a countryman sat. When the car reached May street the conductor opened the door and called "May!" A woman left the car at this street. When it reached Ann the conductor called that name and another woman got off. At Elizabeth street he called out "Elizabeth!" and two women went out. When he called "Ada!" still another woman got up and left.

The countryman went out on the platform and said to the conductor:

"Do you know where I want to get off?"

"I do not."

"Do you know my name?"

"No, sir; I don't."

"Do you know all the women in Chicago?"

"Well, I should say not. Why?"

"Nothin'. I heard you callin' them women that have just been gittin' off by their first names, an' you know'd just where they wanted to stop, an' I thought you was acquainted with all the people in town."—Chicago Mail.

Good Counsel.

How true it is, as The Practical Mechanic says, thousands start well, but never finish one thing at a time. They have a dozen things on hand and no one completed. Time is wasted on unfinished work. Always finish what you begin. One thing finished is worth a hundred half done. The completion of an undertaking yields more pleasure and profit than dozens of plans. The man who is always planning or scheming is rarely, if ever, successful. He often furnishes ideas for others who go persistently to work and finish what his plans suggested. "That was my idea—my plan," we frequently hear some one say, but the man who carried it out was the one who benefited himself and others. Do not begin what you cannot finish. What you undertake, do it, do it, and reap the reward of your work, time and skill. This is applicable both in and out of the mechanical field, and to all classes of mankind.

Dyspepsia

Makes the lives of many people miserable, causing distress after eating, sour stomach, sick headache, heartburn, loss of appetite, a faint, "all gone" feeling, bad taste, coated tongue, and irregularity of the bowels. Dyspepsia does not get well of itself. It requires careful attention, and a remedy like Hood's Sarsaparilla, which acts gently, yet efficiently. It tones the stomach, regulates the digestion, creates a good appetite, banishes headache, and refreshes the mind.

Distress After Eating

Heartburn

Sick Headache

Sour Stomach

"I have been troubled with dyspepsia. I had but little appetite, and what I did eat distressed me, or did me little good. After eating I would have a faint or tired, all-gone feeling, as though I had not eaten anything. My trouble was aggravated by my business, painting. Last spring I took Hood's Sarsaparilla, which did me an immense amount of good. It gave me an appetite, and any food relished and satisfied the craving I had previously experienced." GEORGE A.
